Dr. Reid: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has not made a claim on the Reserve in the 1996–97 financial year which ended before the present Government was elected.

In November 1996, the former Secretary of State sought and secured funding from the Reserve to meet the estimated additional costs of the United Kingdom's contribution to the NATO-led Implementation Force in the Former Yugoslavia in 1996–97 of £184 million; £160 million for ground operations and £24 million for supporting air operations. In the event, the actual cost of the ground operation in 1996–97 was £183 million and a further £22 million was incurred in meeting the United Kingdom's commitment to the follow on Stabilisation Force on which decisions were made after the Reserve claim.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Pensions

Mr Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which local authorities do not exercise their discretion to disregard war widows' pensions and war pensions when assessing entitlement to housing benefit and council tax rebate. [13941]

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the cost of a uniform disregard of war and war widows pensions by all local authorities when assessing entitlement to housing benefit or council tax rebates; and if she will give the figures separately for each of the authorities who currently give no disregard or only a partial disregard. [13166]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The cost to local authorities (LA) in England, Scotland and Wales if all LAs fully disregarded war and war widow's pensions when calculating entitlement to housing benefit and council tax benefit is estimated to be £70 million. This is in addition to the cost to central Government of £15 million for the statutory disregards in these benefits.

Information on discretionary local schemes for housing and council tax benefits is not routinely collected. This is because any such scheme must be funded from an authority's own resources and, therefore, the decision to operate a scheme is entirely for individual LAs.

Reduced Benefit Directions

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents with care on (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) disability working allowance are currently subject to a reduced benefit direction at (i) the rate of reduction which applied before November 1996 and (ii) the 40 per cent. rate of reduction applying after November 1996. [14160]

Mr. Keith Bradley: All children have the right to the support of both their parents wherever they may live.

Before 7 October 1996, parents with care in receipt of a relevant benefit who failed to co-operate with the Child Support Agency without good cause were subject to a benefit reduction of 20 per cent. of the adult income support personal allowance for six months followed by a further reduction of 10 per cent. for 12 months. From 7 October 1996, the reduction was increased to 40 per cent. of the adult income support personal allowance for three years to be immediately renewed if the parent with care continued to fail to co-operate.

The latest available information is from February 1997, which shows that 3,000 parents with care on income support were subject to a 20 per cent. reduction; 7,000 were subject to a 10 per cent. benefit reduction; and 4,000 were subject to a 40 per cent. reduction.

Figures for parents with care in receipt of family credit or disability working allowance who are subject to a benefit reduction are not available.

Extra-Statutory Payments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of extra-statutory payments by the Benefits Agency in each month since January 1995. [14015]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Details of the monthly expenditure on extra-statutory payments by the Benefits Agency are only held from the commencement of the 1995–96 year. Although individual monthly figures are not available for the period 1 January 1995 to 31 March 1995 the annual amount paid has been included in the table.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to resume social security payments to appellant asylum seekers. [13492]

Mr. Keith Bradley: An inter-departmental review led by the Home Office is currently considering all aspects of arrangements for asylum seekers, including the provision of accommodation and support throughout the entire asylum process.

Benefit Backdating

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the annual savings from the proposed limitation of backdating of benefit claims to one month; and if she will break this total down by client group. [14020]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is in the table.

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
Elderly	0	10	14	14
Long-term sick and disabled	0	14	18	18
Lone parents	0	8	10	10
Unemployed	0	10	16	16
Total	0	42	58	58

1. The estimated savings relate to the proposed measure in the Social Security Bill to reduce the maximum amount of backdating of benefit claims from three months to one month.

2. Estimates are based on an ad hoc survey of backdated benefit claims undertaken during 1996 uprated in line with Departmental forecasts of benefit expenditure. The savings are in addition to those estimated for the April 1997 changes which reduced the maximum amount of backdating of benefit claims to three months and benefit reviews to one month.

3. Allocation of benefit savings to client groups is in accordance with the convention used in tables 4 and 5 of the 1997 Departmental Report. Income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit savings are divided between the expected beneficiaries.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the expected annual savings from the limitation of backdating of benefit claims to three months; and if she will break this total down by client group. [14021]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is in the table.

Total	90	120	135	135

1. The estimated savings relate to the April 1997 changes which reduced the maximum amount of backdating of benefit claims to three months and benefit reviews to one month.

2. Based on an ad hoc survey of backdated benefit claims undertaken during 1996, uprated in line with Departmental forecasts of benefit expenditure.

3. Allocation of benefit savings to client groups is in accordance with the convention used in Tables 4 and 5 of the 1997 Departmental Report. Income support savings are divided between the expected beneficiaries.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the percentage of a random sample of lone parents whose youngest child was at school and who were receiving income support who would typically flow off benefit in a three-month period in current economic circumstances. [14023]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

There were 506,000 income support claimants with a lone parent premium at the end of November 1996 whose youngest child was aged five or over. Around 46,000 of these had ceased to claim by the end of February 1997. Some of those whose claim terminated during this period may have reclaimed by February 1997.

Source:

Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiries, November 1996 and February 1997.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the funds committed under the new deal for lone parents in (a) 1997–98 and (b) future years comes from (i) the windfall tax, (ii) savings made from the freezing and re-structuring of the lone parent premium and one parent benefit, (iii) savings from the further reductions planned to the family premium (lone parent rate) and child benefit (lone parent rate) and (iv) the abolition of the child benefit increase for new lone parent claimants in 1998. [14166]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is as follows. The funding for the New Deal for Lone Parents up until October 1998 will be met from within existing provision. The funding for future years will be met entirely from the windfall levy. This will comprise of £150 million over the life of the Parliament plus an additional £50 million to improve financial help with the cost of childcare in the In-Work benefits.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents on income support are estimated to have a child under five years and three months old who has not yet reached their second term at school in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [14163]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows. Each school and local education authority has its own policy on the point in the school year at which children in their fifth year start school, and no central figures are available on the actual age (by year and month) at which children start. The number of lone parents on income support whose youngest child was aged five years and three months or less at February 1997 was 538,000.

Source:

Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, February 1997. Sample size 5 per cent. Lone parents are defined as those receiving the Income Support Lone Parent premium.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the future entitlement to one-parent benefit of lone parents currently receiving income support and who flow off income support after 31 October. [14019]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The proposed changes to Child Benefit for new lone parents are due to be implemented from June 1998, prior to that date current entitlement rules still apply. From implementation of the proposed changes, new lone parents will receive the same rate of Child Benefit as couples with children. Existing recipients will not be affected as long as they continue to satisfy entitlement conditions. In addition, lone parents who are receiving Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance with the lone parent rate of family premium will be able to make one subsequent claim for the lone parent rate of Child Benefit when they move into work.

Mr. Rendal: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the annual cost of the lone parent premium and one parent benefit in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97; [14161]

(2) what are the projected annual costs to the Government of the family premium (lone parent rate) and child benefit (lone parent rate) in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [14162]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables. Information on expenditure on the lone parent premium is not available as components of a benefit award cannot be separately identified. The lone parent premium is payable with Income Support, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

2. Figures are rounded to the nearest £ million.

Estimated expenditure on lone parent premium/family premium (Lone parent)

Income support	276	285	286	275	220
Housing benefit	63	75	85	100	95
Council tax benefit	57	68	74	80	85

1. From April 1997, the lone parent premium payable with the income related benefits was amalgamated with the family premium to become the family premium (lone parent rate).
2. The estimates of expenditure for 1997–98 and 1998–99 show the extra cost of paying a higher rate of family premium to lone parents.
3. The expenditure in Great Britain is obtained by multiplying the number of recipients by the value of the premium. However, some recipients will receive an overall amount of benefit which is less than the value of the premium.
4. Lone parents claiming the income related benefits after April 1998 will no longer be entitled to the higher rate of the family premium. The effects of this change are included in the reported estimates.
5. Estimates for 1994–95 to 1996–97 are based on sample data and are not entirely consistent with Departmental Report figures.
6. Estimates for 1997–98 to 1998–99 are consistent with the overall expenditure estimates in the 1997 Departmental Report.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the annual savings from (a) the removal for new claimants of the family premium (lone parent rate) in April 1998 and (b) the planned abolition for new claimants of the lone parent increase of child benefit under the Social Security Bill 1997. [14168]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The estimated net saving from the removal of entitlement, for new cases, to the lone parent rates of (a) family premium, in income support, jobseeker's allowance, housing and council tax benefit is, in the three years starting from 1998–99, £55 million, £125 million and £170 million. (b) child benefit is, in the three years starting from 1998–99, £5 million, £15 million and £25 million.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much the Government have saved to date from (a) the freezing and re-structuring of the lone parent premium and (b) the freezing and re-structuring of the lone-parent increase of child benefit. [14167]

Pensions Policy Review

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what meetings have been held with pensioners' organisations concerning the review of pensions policy; and if he will make a statement. [13666]

Mr. Denham: On 17 July my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, announced a wide-ranging review of the central areas of insecurity for elderly people, including all aspects of the basic pension and second pensions, including SERPS.

The first stage of the review has involved an extensive public consultation exercise with pensioners' organisations, employers, employees, consumer groups, the pensions industry and others. As part of that exercise I have met the following organisations: Security in Retirement, including Baroness Castle, Mr. Barry Fawcett of the Public Service Pensioners' Council, National Association of Retired Police Officers, the British Pensioners and Trade Union Association, Help the Aged and Age Concern. I have also met the National Pensioners' Convention on 3 occasions reflecting their central and specific role to ensure that the views of today's pensioners are at the heart of the review process. Departmental Officials have also held a separate meeting with them.

We have already received more than 1,100 written responses to the review, including representations from pensioner organisations, which we will consider. The Government intends to publish its initial framework for change in the first part of 1998. There will then be a further period of consultation before firm proposals are developed.

Decision Making and Appeals (Consultation)

Mr Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she plans to make available to the general public the results of the consultation on improving decision making and appeals in social security. [14017]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Shipley (Mr. Leslie) on 23 June, Official Report, column 418. Members of the public can obtain copies from the Decision Making and Appeals Branch, Department of Social Security, The Adelphi, 1–11 John Adam Street, London WC2N 6HT.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Child Labour

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on progress at the Oslo Conference on preventing the exploitation of child labour in third world and developing countries. [13359]

Clare Short: The Conference was organised by the Norwegian Government with the joint support of the ILO and UNICEF. Building on an earlier conference in Amsterdam, as well as three subsequent regional conferences in Asia, Africa and Latin America, its purpose was to achieve agreement on an Agenda for Action, to be taken forward by governments—41 were represented, the majority from developing countries; representatives of multilateral organisations, trades unions, employers associations and NGOs were also represented at the conference.

The Conference was a success. It produced a sensible and balanced agenda for action; it provided the opportunity for the different constituents to understand each other's viewpoints and agree more collaborative ways of working together. While some further work will be required to achieve agreement next year on the new ILO Convention on Intolerable Child Labour, the Oslo Conference will have strengthened in-country and international partnerships for tackling the problem on the ground.

The Conference was largely devoted to working sessions on the themes of legislation, education and social mobilisation. Views on priorities and sequencing between these themes depended largely on each participant's constituency and country of origin. Cutting across each working group was a discussion of how to take measures to end child labour while protecting the livelihoods of working children and their families.

In my statement to the Conference I said that the industrialised world should re-read its own history concerning our own past exploitation of children and then approach this subject with due humility. But our own history reminds us how destructive child labour can be. It stunts childhood and damages health, and the deprivation of education it entails sentences the child concerned to a lifetime of poverty. At the same time, child labour undermines the wages of adults and entrenches families in poverty. If the poor countries are to develop, they must ensure that the children are in school and their parents at work.

I mentioned the great public concern in the UK about child labour. UK consumers are increasingly supporting ethical movements and are not prepared to buy goods produced by exploiting children. But we have learnt that boycotts or over-night exclusion of children from industries can drive the children into worse exploitation. So we must devise strategies that benefit the children and their families. Football stitching is not the most intolerable type of work for children in Pakistan, but it is one which drew international attention. We have to start work where we can. I therefore announced our intention to fund Save the Children to implement a social protection programme in Sialkot so that when, at the end of next year, children stop working in the football stitching industry, they are not forced into more hazardous and exploitative work. We intend that the model developed in Sialkot will then be adapted and applied in another province, focusing on removing and protecting children from more intolerable forms of work which are less susceptible to pressure form international consumers.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in her Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which she is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if she will make a statement. [13627]

Clare Short: Because of the extent of public interest in the issue, DFID's costed action plans, along with that of other government departments, will be reported first to Parliament after analysis by the Central Information Technology Unit (Cabinet Office) and Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency to which DFID's plans were notified in October 1997. They will be available thereafter.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when her Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which she is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if she will make a statement. [13630]

Clare Short: An audit of DFID's systems was completed in June 1997 and identified a small number of departmental systems that were not millennium compliant in addition to those corporate systems that had already been identified.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in her Department and its associated public bodies. [13631]

Clare Short: As Secretary of State I have overall responsibility. The responsible official within the Department is Mr. A. Davis, Head of the Information Systems Department.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if she expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13629]

Clare Short: For 1997–98 we have made provision for £145,000 consisting of £100,000 for purchasing assistance and £45,000 of departmental staff's time working on year 2000 issues. For 1998–99 provision of £65,000 has been made to cover departmental staff time testing changes. The budgets are adequate unless there are unforseen difficulties.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which she is responsible; if she will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–2000; and if she will make a statement. [13628]

Clare Short: The figures of expenditure to date are not available for the corporate systems already made millennium compliant. This is because they were being transferred to a new system for resource accounting and no separate costs for staff input were kept. An estimated £10,000 of staff time establishing inventory, planning and reporting on other systems has been incurred to date.

Ethiopia

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the effect of the lack of rule of law in southern Ethiopia on the delivery of United Kingdom supported aid programmes to that country. [13750]

Clare Short: There has been no disruption to UK supported aid programmes in southern Ethiopia arising from legal or security problems in that region.

Banana Imports

Ms Jennifer Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the World Trade Organisation's ruling on Caribbean banana imports to the EU and its impact on overseas aid to the Caribbean. [14048]

Clare Short: The EU bananas regime represents a serious attempt to meet our obligations to our trading partners and developing countries. We are obviously disappointed that parts of it have been found incompatible with the WTO, but accept that the Community must now set about revising the EU arrangements to bring them into conformity with the WTO's rules.

The Government is considering the WTO findings on the EU banana regime in liaison with the Commission in Brussels, which have the principal responsibility for proposing a new WTO compatible regime. We intend to play a major role as leading advocates of the legitimate interests of those developing countries in the Caribbean which have traditionally supplied the UK market. They can rest assured that we have their interest high on our agenda.

The Windward Islands, already have large allocations of aid from the European Union under the Stabex facility. These are being deployed to strengthen the competitiveness of the banana industry, assist economic diversification and develop social safety nets. The case for additional finance from the European Union will be examined as the implications of the WTO findings become clearer.

Papua New Guinea

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to his Department's letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow on the peoples of the New Guinea highlands, what measures he is taking to help the victims of drought in Papua New Guinea. [14414]

Clare Short: As stated in the letter of 20 October to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, we have already provided £50,000 for the purchase of food, medicines and water containers. We are now considering the 28 October appeal from the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and are expecting proposals from CAFOD and World Vision.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the 12 guiding principles for using market testing and contracting out. [14544]

Dr. David Clark: Following consultation with the Council of Civil Service Unions and the CBI, I have published "12 Guiding Principles in Using Market Testing and Contracting Out" for central Government Departments, including their agencies. I am grateful for the assistance of the Council of Civil Service Unions and the CBI. Wherever possible I have incorporated their suggestions.

The "12 Guiding Principles" have been very well received. They will also apply to private finance initiative projects that involve staff transfers.

The Government's "12 Guiding Principles" are as follows.

1. Our aim is to develop modernised, high quality, efficient, responsive, customer-focused central Government services. Our approach to this is pragmatic not dogmatic.
2. We will work in partnership with the private sector, extending the circle of those involved in public service.
3. We will use market testing and contracting out when in individual cases these can be shown to offer better value for money, that is: better quality services at optimal cost. Our approach to this is pragmatic not dogmatic.
4. Existing plans for market tests and contracting out, therefore, should proceed, unless the Minister is satisfied that in the circumstances of an individual case, better value for money can be achieved by other means, which will enable a Department to live within its running costs ceilings. This judgment should be based on a robust and objective comparison of the particular market test or contracting out exercise and the alternative means available.
5. Ministers remain accountable for services contracted out to the private sector. (That is the Carltona principle is replicated).
6. The energy, skill and commitment of staff are our best assets in modernising public services. They should be properly trained to carry out market testing, contracting out, benchmarking, restructuring and other means for achieving better value for money that is: better quality services at optimal cost.

7. The concerns of those affected by change should be fully taken into account and properly addressed.

8. Where the relevant circumstances apply when work transfers, staff will be protected by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations (TUPE) and the consultation and information requirements of those regulations should be followed scrupulously. To avoid a successful claim for constructive unfair dismissal when staff transfer from Crown employment in circumstances to which TUPE applies, Departments should ensure that the new employers offer broadly comparable occupational pension provision or suitable compensation.

9. Full, effective and continuous communication is a key to successful improvement and change. It should begin as soon as a review which might lead to change is mooted and it should continue afterwards to share what has been achieved. It should happen even when there may be little to report. That way, staff, and their recognised trade union representatives, can be engaged throughout and rumours can be avoided.

10. There should also be full and open information and communication with Departments' customers and stakeholders.

11. Relations with the private sector need to rest on two-way openness and trust. Until the Government's new arrangements on freedom of information are in place, Departments should apply a liberal interpretation to the existing "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information" and its "Guidance on Interpretation." Unsuccessful bidders need to know why they were unsuccessful and how they could succeed next time. For the public, it is important to know how much central Government services cost, no matter who provides them. Commercial confidentiality must not be used as a cloak to deny the public's right to know.

12. Senior management in Departments must give leadership in all these areas and should encourage innovation and continuous improvement.

The guidance on market testing and contracting out, by central Government departments, is being up-dated to reflect these 12 guiding principles. The Council of Civil Service Unions and the CBI are being involved in this work.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what is his estimate of the total cost of the United Kingdom public sector of resolving the computer millennium problem; and if he will make a statement; [13229]

(2) what assessment he has made of the progress being made by departments towards computer millennium compliance; if he expects all departments and public bodies to have achieved complete computer millennium compliance prior to 1 January 2000; and if he will make a statement. [13231]

Dr. David Clark: I have asked Government Departments to provide me with detailed and costed plans for dealing with the year 2000 date change problem as soon as possible after 1 October 1997.

I am awaiting an analysis and report on these plans from the Central Information Technology Unit and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency so that I can form an overall picture of progress, costs and future plans. Once I have done so I will inform Parliament.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those Departments and agencies which did not respond to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency questionnaire regarding progress towards millennium computer compliance, sent out in December 1996 to January 1997. [13230]

Dr. David Clark: In December 1996 and January 1997, the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency issued a year 2000 questionnaire to a sample of 133 central government departments, executive agencies and other public sector organisations. The majority of large departments and agencies responded to this questionnaire. Departments and agencies which did not respond are listed in the table. Most of these have responded to a follow-up survey carried out in the summer. All departments and agencies are required to complete a full and detailed costed action plan as soon as possible after 1 October 1997.

Export Credits Guarantee Department;

General Register Office for Scotland;

Intervention Board;

Legal Aid Board;

Lord Chancellor's Department;

Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department; Serious Fraud Office;

The Royal Parks;

UK Passport Agency.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if he will make a statement. [13632]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The action plans for resolving the computer millennium problem in the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service, its agencies and associated public bodies are complete. These plans will be published by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, when he has completed his analysis of the situation across Government as a whole.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–00; and if he will make a statement. [13633]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Estimates of the total cost of addressing the computer millennium problem within the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service, its Agencies and associated public bodies are:

	To date	1997–98	1998–99	1999-00
(a) Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service	minimal	£27,600	minimal	minimal
(b) Office of Public Service Agencies	£61,128	£50,520	£136,457	£99,350
(c) Other public bodies	nil	nil	nil	nil

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if he will make a statement. [13635]

Mr. Kilfoyle: In the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service, its Agencies and associated public bodies for which I am responsible, millennium computer compliance systems audits were completed between 1994 and September 1997.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13634]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The expenditure required to address the computer millennium problem will be met from within existing planned expenditure totals.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13636]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Within the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service, its agencies and associated public bodies, ministerial responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance rests with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The Cabinet Office civil servant with responsibility for this work is the head of infrastructure. Responsibilities within the agencies are as follows:

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Protection from Harassment Act 1997

Mr. Beith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he intends to implement sections 3(2) to 3(9) of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997. [13005]

Mr. Hoon: Subsections 3(3) to 3(9) of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 introduce, among other things, a system whereby the breach of an injunction granted by a civil court may be dealt with as a criminal offence. Rules and forms have been drafted for use by the High Court, county courts, the crown court and magistrates courts to ensure that the process works effectively. Consultation on these is under way, and as soon as it is complete the outstanding subsections will be commenced.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average time taken by his Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13958]

Mr. Hoon: For letters received since 1 May 1997 the average time is approximately 23 days, including weekends and bank holidays.

Access to Neighbouring Land Act

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to extend the provisions of the Access to Neighbouring Land Act 1992 to Northern Ireland. [11995]

Mr. Hoon: There are no such proposals. The differences between the land laws of Northern Ireland and of England and Wales make such an extension impossible.

TREASURY

Euro Symbol

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research his Department has undertaken into the ease with which the euro currency symbol will be distinguishable from that for sterling. [12534]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The Royal Mint and Bank of England have been closely involved in preparatory work with other member states and national central banks on the design and specifications of euro coins and banknotes. On the basis of the provisional specifications for euro coins and the specifications for banknotes agreed in the European Monetary Institute they will be easily distinguishable from sterling coins and banknotes.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the suppliers to his Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13551]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 30 October 1997]: At 29 October, there were 24 invoices outstanding with a value of £9,002. This represents 2.4 per cent. of invoices paid in a typical month. The value represents less than 1 per cent. of the typical average value of invoices paid per month.

The following table lists the 24 payments that are due to suppliers on 29 October, that will be paid more than 30 days after the receipt of the invoice and which are not in dispute.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the amount allocated in each budget of the European Community for information relating to implementation of EMU; on what occasions such expenditure was authorised by the Economic and Finance Council; and what (a) observations and (b) votes were made by Ministers on each occasion. [12965]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 October 1997]: Funding for information relating to the implementation of EMU has been made available since 1996 under the European Commission's information programme for European citizens (Prince). The relevant budget line is B3306.

The EC Budget does not break down the overall level of Prince by individual programme. I would suggest that the hon. Member approaches the European Commission directly for this information.

The Budget Council have so far considered the budget allocation for Prince on four occasions—during their second reading of the 1996 budget on 17 November 1995, their first and second readings of the 1997 budget on 25 July 1996 and 19 November 1996, and their first reading of the 1998 budget on 24 July 1997.

On each occasion the Budget Council, supported by the UK, have reduced the budget allocation for Prince. However, since this spending is not obligatory under the treaty it has been the European Parliament that has in each case set the final level in the budget.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent Government investment in (a) additional building for maintained schools, (b) the national health service, (c) London Underground and (d) new roads counts within the totals of Government revenue, expenditure and borrowing used for the European monetary union convergence criteria. [12944]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 27 October 1997]: All current and capital expenditure by central and local government contributes to the general government financial deficit (GGFD), the Maastricht measure of the budget deficit. This includes all government grants to maintained schools and London Underground, and all Government spending on the national health service and new roads.

Government lending and government transactions in shares are not included in the GGFD. For example, government lending to London Underground, NHS trust hospitals and students does not increase GGFD. However, the government has to finance such lending through higher taxes or increased borrowing. Increased borrowing would add to general government gross debt—the Maastricht measure of Government debt.

Similarly, receipts from repayments of government lending, and from privatisation proceeds, do not reduce the GGFD but would reduce gross debt.

Taxation (EU)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to preserve the protection of the British veto on tax matters in the European Union. [12843]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government has made it clear that EU tax matters will continue to be subject to unanimous agreement.

Savings

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what tax regime and investment allowances he proposes to apply to individual savings accounts; and if he will make a statement; [13031]

(2) if he plans to allow existing personal equity plans and tax-exempt special savings accounts account holders to retain their current tax incentives and annual investment allowances, under these schemes, following the introduction of the individual savings account in 1999; [13033]

(3) what estimate he has made of the annual cost or benefit to the Exchequer of introducing the individual savings account; [13039]

(4) if the introduction of the individual savings account will alter the contractual obligations between savers and saving institutions; and if he will make a statement. [13032]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Consideration is currently being given, with interested parties, to the scope of tax-privileged savings from 1999. The matters referred to will be covered in a consultative document to be published later this year.

Insurance Premium Tax

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations his Department has received on insurance premium tax for the travel industry. [13123]

Dawn Primarolo: I have received a number of representations on this subject.

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's review of insurance premium tax; and what is the timetable for the review. [13122]

Dawn Primarolo: I have asked officials in Customs and Excise to monitor the effect of the introduction of the higher rate of insurance premium tax and this will include the impact of the differential tax treatment on travel agents. It is too early yet to draw any firm conclusions from this process and I anticipate that the monitoring will continue for some time. The issue of the application of the higher rate to travel insurance sold by travel agents will also be the subject of a judicial review hearing on 4 November. The conclusions of that hearing will clearly need to be taken into account when considering whether changes are necessary to this measure.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his Department's review of the impact of different rates of insurance premium tax as between travel agents and brokers. [14006]

Dawn Primarolo: I have asked officials in Customs and Excise to monitor the effect of the introduction of the higher rate of insurance premium tax and this will include the impact of the differential tax treatment on travel agents. It is too early yet to draw any firm conclusions from this process.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with banks on the need for their computer systems to be millennium compliant. [13157]

Mrs. Liddell: This subject has been raised in Treasury discussions with the British Bankers Association, which has issued guidance and a timetable to the industry. The Bank of England has been talking to banks about their implementation of the timetable.

Trade Statistics

Dr. Fox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) proportion and (b) value of Britain's trade was conducted in (i) German marks, (ii) United States dollars and (iii) other European currencies in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [13764]

Mrs. Liddell: The following two tables show the most recent official data on currency of invoice other than sterling, relating to 1984–1988. The data requested are only available for US dollars. Data for individual European currencies other than sterling are not available, although a special exercise to determine Deutschmark usage suggested that, in 1987 and 1988, this was 4 per cent. for exports and 14 per cent. for imports.

Elderly People (Winter Mortality)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the excess winter mortality deaths for elderly people in the winter of 1996–97. [14208]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 4 November 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to your recent question on the number of excess winter deaths among the elderly in the winter of 1996–97.

Based on the latest available data, there were an estimated 37,800 excess winter deaths among people aged 75 years and over, and 44,800 excess deaths among people aged 65 years and over, in England and Wales during the winter of 1996–97.

Excess winter deaths are defined as the number of deaths in the four months from December to March less the average of the numbers during the preceding autumn (August to November) and the following summer (April to July).

EC Spending

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government intends to pursue the four challenges made by the United Kingdom in the European Court of Justice to spending without a legal base by the European Commission. [14576]

Mrs Liddell: The Government has decided to continue with the four cases currently before the European Court of Justice. These cover expenditure on social exclusion projects, for both the 1995 and 1996 budget years; and, for the 1996 budget year, measures in favour of older people and the "pilot action" for a European Voluntary Service.

I should like to make it clear that in choosing to retain these challenges the Government is seeking to uphold an important matter of budgetary principle. We believe that it is essential for the proper and effective control of public expenditure that the European Commission should be bound by the same rules of propriety that apply elsewhere in the EU.

At the same time, I am anxious to stress that this decision in no way reflects our views on the policy content of the challenged measures nor calls into question the Government's commitment to Community action in the social field where this is agreed by the Council. Our support for the new treaty provisions agreed at Amsterdam, which allow the Council to adopt small spending programmes on employment and social exclusion by QMV, is evidence of this.

Private Finance Initiative

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the latest list of signed PFI projects. [14578]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Yes, I have done so today.

International Meetings

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the international meetings he attended in September. [14577]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I attended the Commonwealth Finance Ministers Meeting in Mauritius on the 15–17 September. I then attended the first meeting of Asian and European Finance Ministers on 19 September in Bangkok. This was followed by a series of meetings in Hong Kong. The G7 was held on 20 September with the G10 Finance Ministers and central bank governors meeting on 21 September. The IMF's interim committee meeting was also held on 21 September, and was followed by the IMF/World Bank annual meeting on 23 September. I also attended the IMF/World Bank Development Committee with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development on 22 September.

My over-arching priorities for these meetings were the reduction of developing country debt and the promotion of the benefits of openness and transparency in economic policy.

I announced the UK's "Debt 2000" initiative at the Commonwealth Finance Ministers meeting. This initiative, which has now been dubbed the "Mauritius mandate", is designed to resolve the debt problems of poor countries once and for all and set them on a path to sustainable growth. It proposes that every poor country eligible for debt relief should have at least embarked on the process of securing the full relief they need by the year 2000. This will contribute to the international target of halving the proportion of the world's population living in absolute poverty by 2015.

I stressed that the success of this mandate depends not only on the commitment of the creditor countries but also on solid action by the debtors. Debtor countries must adopt and maintain sound economic policies which are necessary for sustainable economic development. Each country is unique and no one policy will be right for every country. But accountable economic decision-making and a focus on productive expenditure, including basic health and education, will be vital aspects of their economic programmes. My right hon. Friend, the Minister for International Development announced that the UK is willing to cancel the remaining aid debt due to the UK from poorer Commonwealth countries. These countries could be relieved of the need to repay as much as £132 million.

I encourage other creditors to provide the maximum possible relief to ensure a robust exit from unsustainable debt to those countries who focus on transparency and productive expenditure. I expressed my desire for these countries to receive the necessary debt relief in less than the maximum six years that is presently envisaged under the rules of the initiative. The Mauritius mandate was well received and was supported by other Commonwealth Ministers.

I also launched a new initiative on openness in economic decision making at the interim committee. My central proposal was that the IMF should develop a code of good practice for promoting openness in fiscal and monetary policy. I believe that this should focus on basic principles that apply to all IMF members. As such, I proposed that the IMF should, as a matter of course, comment on such practices in their IV consultations with all member countries. I also suggested that this code could be used operationally in the design of IMF programmes for financial assistance. These proposals attracted considerable interest and the fund is now developing such a code on the fiscal side.

I stressed that long-term stability in monetary and fiscal policy is necessary to achieve sustainable growth. But, the role of government must also be to equip individuals and companies to succeed in the ever more competitive global market-place. Part of this entails ensuring that policies which provide economic stability are combined with institutions and procedures which create the confidence that stability will be maintained. It was agreed that greater openness and transparency would enhance policy credibility and limit the potential for corruption.

In keeping with this, I announced that the UK would publish a full set of annual accounts and a quarterly report on the region exchange reserves detailing the UK's outstanding forward position.

Another key feature of the discussions at these meetings was capital flows. It was agreed that private capital flows can bring substantial benefits and as such, the report of the Commonwealth working group on private capital flows was endorsed by the Ministers. The importance of sound macroeconomic policies and financial systems, strong regulatory and supervisory frameworks and political stability were recognised as essential for encouraging inward investment.

There was general agreement that the international financial institutions also have a key role to play in putting in place multilateral arrangements and mechanisms for promoting and coping with private capital flows. More specifically for the Commonwealth, Ministers agreed on the key elements of a code of good practice for national policies that attract and sustain private capital flows. The secretariat was asked to develop these elements into a full code as soon as possible.

The interim committee adopted the statement on "The Liberalisation of Capital Movements Under an Amendment of the Fund's Articles" and considered that an amendment of the fund's articles will provide the most effective means of promoting an orderly liberalisation of capital movements consistent with the fund's role in the international monetary system. The proposed amendment to the articles will also ensure that liberalisation can be phased in at a country's chosen pace and that controls can be reintroduced on a temporary basis.

The first ever meeting of Asian and European Finance Ministers represented an important addition to the Asia-Europe Meetings (or ASEM) process which began only last year, and reflected the growing co-operation between two regions whose economic and financial interests are rapidly converging.

The meeting began with an exchange of views on the macroeconomic outlook and developments in foreign exchange markets. I offered my full support to the programmes of adjustment which Thailand and the Philippines have agreed with the IMF, and stressed how crucial it would be to adhere to these programmes. Asian partners were keen to learn more about the implications of EMU, and we agreed that every opportunity would be taken to keep them fully informed on latest developments.

In the second session on financial sector issues, I stressed the need for close co-operation, and the importance for both Asia and Europe of sharing and learning from each other—especially through a greater openness, in the trade in financial services and a welcoming attitude to foreign capital. We agreed a number of useful initiatives, including closer co-operation on financial supervision and the fight against money laundering.

The Government places great importance on the ASEM process, and the Prime Minister very much looks forward to welcoming Asian and European Heads to London next April as host of the second ASEM summit. The G7 meeting considered recent developments in south-east Asia in the context of surveillance. We were informed of international efforts to assist Thailand and expected the Thai authorities not only to implement the Fund program but also to continue to co-operate with the other international financial institutions. We agreed on the importance of minimising contagion and will continue to monitor closely developments in south-east Asia. In accordance with this, the importance of increased transparency within and supervision of financial systems was stressed. We also discussed recent developments in exchange and financial markets and agreed to monitor developments in these markets and cooperate as necessary.

My colleagues were interested in the plans that we have for our presidency of the G7 and G8 next year. I informed them that employability will be one of the main themes of the UK presidency.

The G10 meeting welcomed the broad endorsement given to the concerted strategy to promote financial stability in emerging market economies that has been developed in collaboration with representatives of these economies. The finalisation of the Basle core principles of effective banking supervision was welcomed and the importance of their endorsement and implementation by national authorities was stressed.

I was nominated as Chairman of the Group of Ten for the coming year. At the interim committee, I welcomed the agreements in the executive board on the eleventh review of quotas which provides a 45 per cent. increase for the fund—$90 billion—and the special equity allocation of 21.4 billion SDRs which was formally approved at the meetings.

Both the Secretary of State for International Development and I attended the Development Committee meeting where we stressed that corruption and weak governance undermine macroeconomic stability, private sector activity and sustainable development objectives, and may erode international support for development objectives, and may erode international support for development cooperation. We supported calls for criminalisation of bribery and the abolition of tax deductibility of bribes, and for the fund to examine the effects of corruption in governance on countries macroeconomic performance.

A package to alleviate the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency's resource constraints was agreed.

At the joint IMF/World Bank annual meeting I outlined the changes we have made to both monetary and fiscal policies in the UK. I outlined the benefits of giving operational independence to the Bank of England and the benefits clear rules, a new discipline, openness and accountability will bring to fiscal policy. I explained that our task is to secure high and sustainable levels of growth and employment in the UK as well as in the rest of the world.

I stressed the importance of our dependence upon each other and the importance of international cooperation to maintain an open economy. Although we are committed to a constructive partnership with Europe, we must remain open and outward looking to the rest of the world. And above all, regional concerns must never replace international commitments.

Copies of my speeches and the communiqués of these meetings have been put in the Library of the House. There was no G7 communiqué.

Friend the Secretary of State has invited around 200 people involved in tourism, hospitality and leisure to a conference later this month to hear more about the proposals and the opportunities they present for the industry to meet its own staffing needs while offering young people real jobs leading to long-term, worthwhile careers.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13609]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The cost of preventive and remedial action on Year 2000 will be met from existing PES provision.

DEFENCE

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will give in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [13598]

(2) which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13601]

(3) if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13599]

(5) when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if he will make a statement. [13600]

Mr. Spellar: In accordance with Cabinet Office guidelines, an audit of all computer-based systems across MOD, including the Defence Agencies, has been under way since mid-1996. The audit is being used to identify and assess the Year 2000 compliancy of systems that process date-related information and to measure progress in modification or replacement of affected systems. The audit covers equipment ranging from office systems to front-line military hardware. The audit is one component of the MOD action plan for managing the Year 2000 problem. As is the case with other Departments, a costed action plan has been provided to the Cabinet Office, who are preparing a report for my right hon. Fiend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who will then inform Parliament of the conclusions. The plans are exempt from disclosure under Category 2 of the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information which permits non-disclosure prior to an announcement. However, once the announcement has been made the plans will be available to the public.

No new money is available for resolution of the Year 2000 problem, the costs of which will be met from within existing financial resources.

The Minister with responsibility for Year 2000 action is the Minister for Defence Procurement, Lord Gilbert. Within MOD all budget holders have been made responsible for ensuring that affected systems within their departments are modified or replaced. Overall responsibility for managing the MOD response to the Year 2000 problem lies with the Director General of Information and Communication Services, Major General W. J. P. Robins.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he (a) has had and (b) plans to have with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and Western European Union counterparts on the problems facing computer systems through the century date change; and if he will make a statement. [13504]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD initiated a departmental programme 18 months ago to address Year 2000 date change problems within its computer systems. During this time, the Year 2000 question has been raised with our counterparts in NATO and Allied Nations. They are fully aware of the serious nature of the problem and the actions being taken within UK MOD to ensure that Defence operations are not at risk from failure of systems to process date-related information correctly. We are discussing with our Allies the need for a collaborative approach to ensuring the continued effectiveness of the interconnection between systems on which allied operations depend. Senior-level discussions have taken place with the US Department of Defense on solutions to the Year 2000 problem, which has also been raised within the NATO Command, Control and Communication Board, the most senior committee in NATO dealing with Command and Control Systems, and is being raised within the WEU information systems forum. This will be kept as a high-priority topic within NATO and the WEU, and established as a regular agenda item on the appropriate committees so that progress can be monitored.

Equipment Exhibition (Indonesian Delegation)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Indonesian delegates attended the Government's Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition in September. [13970]

Mr. Spellar: The official Indonesian delegation referred to in the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 23 June 1997, Official Report, column 344, did not attend the Royal Navy and British Army Equipment Exhibition. The Indonesian Defence Attaché in London did, however, attend the exhibition.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by appointment the officers who constitute the selection board for three and four star appointments in the (a) Army, (b) Royal Navy and (c) Royal Air Force. [14233]

Dr. Reid: The officers who constitute the Services selection boards for promotion to 3 and 4 star appointments are:

For 4 star appointments, the Chief of the Air Staff makes recommendations to the Secretary of State.

Trident

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current estimate of the (a) running costs, (b) service life expectancy and (c) de-commissioning costs of Trident [13988]

Mr. Spellar: Our latest estimate of the running costs of Trident remains as stated by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces in his answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 356. As was stated, that estimate included an element for decommissioning and disposal costs; this represented some 5 per cent. of the total. Trident is currently programmed to have an overall service life expectancy of some 30 years.

Eurofighter

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost per unit of the Eurofighter. [13103]

Mr. Spellar: The current estimated unit cost of Eurofighter for the UK is £40.2 million at today's prices.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Eurofighter will enter squadron service with the Royal Air Force. [13102]

Mr. Spellar: The first Eurofighter is scheduled to be delivered to the Royal Air Force in December 2001.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Eurofighter will enter service. [13864]

Mr. Spellar: The first Eurofighter is scheduled to be delivered to the Royal Air Force in December 2001.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Eurofighter aircraft have been ordered by (a) the UK, (b) Germany, (c) Italy and (d) Spain; and what is each country's workshare. [13862]

Mr. Spellar: The declared aircraft offtake requirements of the nations is: United Kingdom 232, Germany 180, Italy 121 and Spain 87 and these give workshare entitlements of, United Kingdom 37.42 per cent., Germany 29.03 per cent., Italy 19.52 per cent. and Spain 14.03 per cent.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the advantages of Eurofighter over (a) Refale, (b) Gripen (c) Mig 29. [13859]

Mr. Spellar: Studies by the Ministry of Defence have confirmed that Eurofighter is the most cost-effective option to meet the Royal Air Force's currently assessed future needs.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original estimate of the cost of the Eurofighter project to each of the partners; what are the current projected costs in equivalent terms; and how much each country has already spent. [13863]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence does not have all the information requested in respect of our Eurofighter partners. On the basis of a requirement for 232 aircraft, the UK's estimated procurement cost for Eurofighter at the start of development in 1988 amounted to £13.2 billion at 1997 prices, and the current estimate is £15.9 billion at 1997 prices. Up to 30 September 1997 we have spent a total of £2.8 billion.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current estimate of the costs to his Department of (a) research, (b) construction and (c) commissioning in respect of the European fighter aircraft. [13987]

Mr. Spellar: The latest estimated costs to the UK of the Eurofighter programme are £4.4 billion for the full development phase, which includes the costs of earlier phases. Further, we currently estimate that it will cost £11.5 billion for the procurement of 232 aircraft. This figure includes the cost of initial support for the aircraft.

NATO Expansion

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the increased defence burden and resulting financial costs placed on (a) Poland, (b) Hungary and (c) the Czech republic as a result of NATO membership. [14003]

Dr. Reid: By joining an alliance whose essential purpose is to safeguard the freedom and security of all its members by collective means, Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic will lighten their defence burden, as no single Ally is forced to rely on its own national efforts alone in dealing with basic security challenges.

The costs of enlargement to the three invited countries will fall into two categories: the development of their ability to operate alongside other NATO countries on the full range of Alliance missions; and their contribution to NATO common-funded budgets.

The countries concerned were, in any case, intending to modernise and restructure their Armed Forces. Their contribution to NATO common-funded budgets is being discussed.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the costs of NATO expansion for Britain. [14004]

Dr. Reid: NATO staff are currently studying the military and financial implications of enlargement, and a report will be made to NATO Ministers in December.

NATO Heads of State and Government stated in the Madrid Declaration:

"We are confident that, in line with the security environment of the Europe of today, Alliance costs associated with the integration of new members will be manageable and that the resources necessary to meet those costs will be provided."

That remains our assessment. If additional spending is required, Britain will pay its share.

Arms Exports (Indonesia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom armed forces or Ministry of Defence personnel are involved in the servicing and maintenance of British Aerospace Hawk aircraft sold to Indonesia; and if he will make a statement. [13969]

Mr. Spellar: None.

Ships (Names)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the criteria for selecting names for new ships of the Royal Navy. [13701]

Mr. Spellar: Proposals for ships names for both the Royal Navy and the Royal Fleet Auxiliary are initiated by the Admiralty Ships Names and Badges Committee which takes into consideration a number of criteria, including the promotion of links with communities, the geographical spread of names and opportunities to revive those with an honourable history. Selected names are submitted, through the Controller of the Navy and the First Sea Lord, to the Secretary of State for approval. In the case of major vessels, final approval is sought from HM The Queen.

Defence Diversification Agency

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what funding his Department intends to allocate to the Defence Diversification Agency. [14202]

Mr. Spellar: No decision on funding has yet been taken. This will depend on the outcome of the consultation period on our forthcoming Green Paper on diversification.

Naval Forces (Gulf)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what United Kingdom naval forces are currently on station in the Gulf. [14300]

Dr. Reid: The Royal Navy currently has a destroyer and a frigate deployed in the Arabian Gulf engaged on Armilla Patrol duties. They are ably supported by a Royal Fleet Auxiliary.

Contingency and Operational Procurement Exhibition

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to public funds of the Ministry of Defence police presence at the COPEX exhibition in 1997. [13995]

Mr. Spellar: The cost of the Ministry of Defence Police presence at the COPEX exhibition has not yet been fully assessed. I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average time taken by his Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13947]

Mr. Spellar: Statistics are not held in the form requested. My Department has a target of replying to letters from hon. Members within 15 working days of receipt. Since the start of the Session Ministers have replied to 65 per cent. of letters within this target and to 80 per cent. within 20 working days.

Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons questions were not allowed at the press conference at the Government's Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition in September. [13672]

Mr. Spellar: The Royal Navy and British Army Equipment Exhibition (RNBAEE) was opened formally by my noble Friend the Minister for Defence Procurement on 1 September. In light of the tragic death of Diana Princess of Wales the previous day, my noble Friend decided to make only a brief opening statement.

At the opening of the press day on 31 August, the Head of Defence Export Services gave a short presentation on the work of his organisation and outlined the key themes of the exhibition. This was an address of welcome and was not planned as a press conference. In the event, in view of the death of the Princess only a few hours earlier, he also severely limited his opening remarks.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the suppliers to his Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13543]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 30 October 1997]: This is a matter for the Chief Executives of the Defence Bills Agency, the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, the Meteorological Office and the United Kingdom Hydrographic Office. I have asked the Chief Executives to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from I. S. Elrick to Mrs. Cheryl Gillan, dated 4 November 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about outstanding debts to suppliers as, in the main, this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Bills Agency.

Departmental policy is to pay bills promptly within agreed contract terms or, where no such terms exist, within 30 days from receipt of the goods/service or a valid invoice, whichever is the later. The Defence Bills Agency pays very high volumes of bills and individual instances where these payment targets were not met could only be listed and valued at disproportionate cost. During the period 1 April–30 September 97, this Agency received 1.75 million bills of which 188 narrowly missed their due 30-day target. Howeve,r I can assure you that these bills were paid shortly after 30 days.

I hope this is of assistance.

Letter from John Clarke to Mrs. Cheryl Gillan, dated 4 November 1997:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Defence a Parliamentary Question about outstanding debts to suppliers. As this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the United Kingdom Hydrographic Office, I have been asked to reply to you directly.

All departments are required to pay their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is the later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

I hope the information provided has been of some assistance.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mrs. Cheryl Gillan, dated 4 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency to reply to your question about suppliers who are owed outstanding amounts.

The Agency's policy is to pay bills promptly within agreed contract terms or, where no such terms exist, within 30 days of receipt of a validated invoice. DERA currently pays 98% of invoices without queries within these targets; during the month of October 1997, 98.2% of cleared invoices were paid on time. Detailed data on individual suppliers could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996/97.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Mrs. Cheryl Gillan, dated 4 November 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about outstanding debt to suppliers. For the Meterological Office, this matter falls to me as the Chief Executive.

Our payment policy is to pay suppliers within 30 days of receipt of the invoice within the Meteorological Office, or of the delivery date if later. For the period 1 June 1996 to 31 March 1997, over 90% of the valid invoices were paid within 30 days of receipt. We will continue to work to improve this performance. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departments payment performance for 1996/97. Detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14376]

The Attorney General: None.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drugs

37. Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement about the Government's policy to curb the misuse of drugs. [12033]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Prime Minister announced last month that Keith Hellawell—currently Chief Constable of West Yorkshire—would be the new UK anti-drugs co-ordinator, and will take up his post early in the New Year. He will be supported by a deputy, Michael Trace. The co-ordinator's first priority will be to review existing action against drugs across the board, and then make recommendations to Ministers for further developments.

41. Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Council what assessment she has made of the result of the Government's strategy on the reduction in the use of illegal drugs. [12037]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The most recent national data on the prevalence of drug misuse are from the 1996 British Crime Survey (BCS). The report concludes that between the 1994 and 1996 BCS, there was essentially no change in levels of drug misuse across England and Wales as a whole. I have asked Keith Hellawell to consider the implications of these findings.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Probation Studies Diploma

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the proposed diploma in probation studies will require a full-time course of study; how long the course will last; and at which institutions it will be available. [12731]

Joyce Quin: The new arrangements for the recruitment and training of probation officers, which I announced in a reply to the hon. member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Twigg) on 29 July, Official Report, column 151, will be employment led. Trainee probation officers will be employed by their local probation services while they work towards the new combined diploma and national vocational qualification. The length of the training period will vary according to trainees' previous work and academic experience. Work is under way to implement these new arrangements, but it is too early to say which institutions will offer the diploma.

Remand

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to limit the period for which people accused of non-violent crimes may be held on remand prior to cases coming before the courts; and if he will make a statement. [13324]

Mr. Michael: The Government are determined to ensure that defendants should spend as little time as possible on remand awaiting trial. The period for which those charged with indictable offences may be held in custody on remand is already restricted by statutory custody time limits. Unfortunately, it is clear that in far too many cases it has been necessary for the courts to extend those time limits and the Government intend to introduce stricter criteria in the forthcoming Crime and Disorder Bill to govern the court's decision to grant extensions to limits.

The remand decision, whatever the offence charged, is, of course, a matter for the court in the exercise of its judicial discretion in accordance with the Bail Act 1976. That Act establishes a statutory right to bail for all defendants involved in criminal proceedings, subject to certain exceptions. Bail may be withheld only in the case of a person accused of an offence punishable with imprisonment if the court is satisfied that there are substantial grounds for believing that, if released on bail, that person would abscond, commit an offence, interfere with witnesses or otherwise obstruct the course of justice.

In taking a remand decision, the court has to consider the nature and seriousness of the offence, the character, antecedents and community ties of the defendant, his past record under any previous grants of bail and the strength of the evidence against his having committed the offence, as well as any other considerations which appear relevant.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform the remand system; and if he will make a statement. [13720]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The consultation paper, "Tackling Delays in the Youth Justice System", published on 15 October, sets out a number of legislative proposals which are intended to remove obstacles to the speedy and efficient handling of cases, introduce new and more effective procedures and establish greater discipline in the processing of cases through the setting up of statutory time limits. The deadline for comments on the paper is 12 November 1997.

The consultation paper, "Reducing Remand Delays", was issued on 23 October 1997. It sets out the time limits proposals in the context of the adult courts. It provides a little more detail on the procedural aspect of the new measures—for example, the mechanics of reinstituting proceedings—than the "Tackling Delays in the Youth Justice System" paper. For the sake of completeness, the "Reducing Remand Delays" paper also includes the other non-Narey legislative measures aimed at reducing delays in all courts: the two new bail measures and the power to conduct pre-trial hearings by live television link. The deadline for comments on the proposals in this paper is 14 November 1997.

Copies of both these documents have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the Bail Act 1976 to ensure that courts take notice of the effects that remands in custody may have on the mental and physical health of defendants; and if he will make a statement. [13723]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The remand decision is a matter for the courts in the exercise of their judicial discretion in accordance with the Bail Act 1976. That Act establishes a statutory right to bail for all defendants involved in criminal proceedings, subject to certain exceptions. Bail may be withheld only in the case of a person accused of an offence punishable with imprisonment if the court is satisfied that there are substantial grounds for believing that, if released on bail, that person would abscond, commit an offence, interfere with witnesses or otherwise obstruct the course of justice. In taking a remand decision, the Bail Act requires courts to consider the nature and seriousness of the offence, the character, antecedents and community ties of the defendant, his past record under any previous grants of bail, and the strength of the evidence against his having committed the offence as well as any other considerations which appear relevant. Courts may seek information from the probation service and advice of health care professionals to assist them. They will also have regard to any representations made by the prosecution or defence. In addition, courts may use the provisions of the Mental Health Act 1983 to enable appropriate mentally disordered persons to be remanded to hospital rather than prison.

I have no plans to alter these arrangements but will consider ways of improving the information available to the court on the mental health of defendants the better to inform decisions, including an assessment of risk to the public.

Firearms Compensation Scheme

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average time taken to process compensation payments for people who have handed in handguns to the police; [13904]

(2) what action he is taking to reduce the time it is taking to process compensation payments for people who have handed in handguns to the police. [13905]

Mr. Michael: Claims submitted under options A and B of the compensation scheme are being processed in 12–14 weeks. The more complicated option C claims will be processed when the bulk of these have been cleared.

More than 37,800 compensation claims and ex gratia applications under the small calibre pistol scheme have been received since 1 July, and the volume is such that some delays are inevitable. More than 14,200 payments have been made to a value of more than £17 million.

It has always been recognised that the pressure of claims received over a short hand-in period was bound to lead to processing delays, and claimants were advised that they may have to wait several weeks before receiving any payment. Despite that, an additional factor in delay is the burden of telephone enquiries about the progress of claims. A recent survey showed that the Home Office was receiving around 2,000 such calls a week.

As I promised in July, everything possible is being done to process claims in the shortest time possible. For instance, weekend overtime is being worked and staff have been temporarily promoted to boost examiner numbers. I wish to record my thanks to everyone who has contributed to the efforts to date including officials and the police officers involved.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about non-payment of claims submitted under the firearms compensation scheme which have been agreed by the receiving constabulary; and if he will make a statement. [14049]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 3 November 1997]: A number of inquiries have been received about the progress of individual compensation claims. The firearms compensation section is dealing with claims as quickly as possible, and in the order in which they are received. It has so far made over 14,200 payments to the value of over £17 million. The sheer number of claims received over the three-month hand-in period means that some processing delays are inevitable. That was explained to the House when the scheme was approved, but, as promised, we are doing all that we can to keep these to a minimum.

New Prison (Colchester)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment exercises his Department has conducted into the possibility of establishing a prison in the Colchester constituency during the past five years. [13700]

Joyce Quin: The Prison Service has had a long standing interest in developing a new prison in the east London/Essex area. This will provide new prison places to meet the population increases now being projected and help reduce the overcrowding currently being experienced within London prisons, to which large numbers of young offenders and adult prisoners from the Essex area are sent.

A number of sites in the east London/Essex area have been looked at by the Prison Service in recent years. One site in the Colchester area was investigated some two years ago, but was considered too small for a prison development.

Another possible site in Colchester has been recently drawn to the attention of the Prison Service. This is now being assessed, but it is too early to say whether it will prove suitable to be pursued further.

Feltham Young Offenders Institute

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Prison Service about alleged assaults by prison officers against Mr. Carlos Pulgaria at Feltham young offenders institute on 5 September; if the officers against whom the allegations were made are still on duty; and if he will make a statement. [13971]

Joyce Quin: Mr. Carlos Pulgarin has alleged that while he was in Feltham young offender institution in September he was assaulted by prison officers. Because of the seriousness of the allegations, the governor referred the matter to the police to investigate. I understand that the police have sent their report on the incident to the Crown Prosecution Service, who are considering what action to take. The officers against whom the allegations were made are at present on special leave.

Butane Gas

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will amend the terms of the Intoxicating Substances Supply Act 1985 so as to introduce a strict liability clause with regard to the sale of Butane gas lighter refills to under 16-year-olds, if he will nominate an enforcement agency for the application of the act; and if he will make a statement. [13703]

Mr. George Howarth: We have no plans to amend the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985. The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs undertook a study into volatile substance abuse, the results of which were published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in 1995. A copy of their report is in the Library. They concluded that there were no acceptable legislative changes that would do more than the Act already does to protect young people. Responsibility for enforcement of the provisions of the Act rests with the police.

Daylight Saving

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the evidence of the effect of the end of British summer time on levels of crime. [13760]

Mr. George Howarth: A 1996 Home Office analysis suggested that an extra hour's light at the end of winter days might slightly reduce overall notifiable offences. However, this assumed no offsetting changes in offenders' and the general public's behaviour. If there were, some opportunities for crime might increase.

Intrusive Surveillance

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances MI5 operatives are allowed to undertake intrusive surveillance without first obtaining a warrant. [13781]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 3 November 1997]: There are no circumstances under which Security Service officers would be allowed to carry out intrusive surveillance involving entry on to or interference with property which would otherwise be unlawful, except under authority of a warrant issued by the Secretary of State under the Intelligence Services Act 1994.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken by his Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13952]

Mr. Straw: The average time taken to reply to letters from hon. Members is 25 working days. The target response times in my Department are 15 days for the Home Office, 25 for the immigration and nationality directorate, the United Kingdom Passport Agency and Her Majesty's Prison Service. Departmental performance is shown in the annual statistics that were published on 17 June 1997 in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) on 17 June 1997, Official Report, columns 107–12. Some targets were shortened earlier this year. These will be reflected in the 1997 annual statistics that will be published in due course.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if he will make a statement; [13572]

(2) what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [13573]

Mr. Straw: My Department's costed action plans will be sent to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) this week. The plans will be analysed by the Central Information Technology Unit and CCTA and the conclusions reported to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who will then inform Parliament. The plans will be exempted from disclosure under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which permits non-disclosure prior to an announcement. However, once the announcement has been made the plans will be available to the public.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13574]

Mr. Straw: My Department is proceeding on the basis that the cost of preventive and remedial action on the millennium problem will be met from existing public expenditure survey provision.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if he will make a statement. [13575]

Mr. Straw: My Department's main information technology service provider—Sema Group—completed an audit covering the bulk of our systems in late 1996. Since then, business areas have been reviewing, updating and prioritising their inventories as part of the process of preparing their costed action plans.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13576]

Mr. Straw: I am the Minister responsible for ensuring millennium compliance in my Department. The civil servant with responsibility for this work is the director of corporate resources.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) dates of and (b) participants in meetings he has held with the cosmetics industry and researchers to discuss a voluntary ban on cosmetic testing on animals. [13679]

Mr. George Howarth: The industry has been consulted through representative groups and by informal means. no meetings have been necessary. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will be in a position to make an announcement on Thursday about developments concerning cosmetics testing, the use of great apes in scientific procedures, welfare committees in designated establishments and the composition of the Animal Procedures Committee.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received requesting the introduction of a licensing system for car boot sales. [13309]

Mr. Caborn: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has received seven letters making such a request since May 1997. We are currently considering whether further controls are required over temporary markets, such as car boot sales, which are currently permitted for up to 14 days in any calendar year under the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Answers

36. Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Council what discussions she has had to encourage greater transparency in the answers to parliamentary questions. [12031]

Mrs Ann Taylor: Ministers are under a duty—set out in the ministerial code—to be as open as possible with Parliament and the public, refusing to provide information only when disclosure would not be in the public interest, which should be decided in accordance with relevant statute and the code of practice on access to Government information.

WPC Yvonne Fletcher

38. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Council if she will set up a Select Committee on the re-analysis by the Metropolitan police of the circumstances surrounding the murder of WPC Yvonne Fletcher. [12034]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: No, this would not be appropriate in the circumstances. The police investigation is continuing. The necessary analysis and inquiries are complex; and the police will complete them as soon as is possible.

Semicircular Seating

39. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Council what progress she has made on assessing the advantages of a semicircular seating arrangement for the House. [12035]

Mrs Ann Taylor: None. As I said in the House on 17 June at column 111, I believe that we are a long way from any consensus that the shape of the Chamber should be changed. I have no proposals to make any structural changes to the Chamber.

Modernisation of the House

40. Mr. Winnick: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the progress made in respect of the proposals from the Modernisation of the House Committee. [12036]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Committee reported on 23 July and a debate on its conclusions is to be held shortly.

Recesses (School Holidays)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to arrange parliamentary business so that recesses coincide with school holidays. [12030]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I am aware of my hon. Friend's concern. As I previously told the House, I am in favour of our periodic Adjournments coinciding with school holidays whenever possible.

I remain mindful of hon. Members' views and of the representations that have been made. The Modernisation Committee will soon be looking at the parliamentary calendar, and school holidays and half-terms will be one of the issues to be addressed.

Advisory Committee on Works of Art

Sir Patrick Cormack: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what are the membership and terms of reference of the Advisory Committee on Works of Art. [14034]

Mr. Kirkwood: I understand that Madam Speaker has appointed the following Members to the Advisory Committee on Works of Art: the hon. Members for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook), for Staffordshire, South (Sir P. Cormack), for Dudley, North (Mr. Cranston), for Wantage (Mr. Jackson), for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan), for Blackpool, South (Mr. Marsden), for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Maxton) and for Windsor (Mr. Trend).

The terms of reference of the Committee are:

to advise the Speaker generally on matters relating to works of art, including acquisitions; and to advise the Accommodation and Works Committee on the policy on, conservation of, and curatorial management of the collections of pictures, statues, murals, historic furniture and furnishings and decorative interior of the Palace; and advise on the decorative interiors of other buildings in the Parliamentary Estate when requested by that Committee.

Members' Staff

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she has to increase the numbers of staff available to hon. Members. [12025]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: None. Members can employ staff out of their office costs allowance, which was reviewed by the SSRB in July 1996.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Council how many Statutory Instruments have been made since 31 July without parliamentary scrutiny; and if she will make a statement as to the future arrangements for dealing with these instruments. [13956]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The number of Statutory Instruments laid was 153. I have no plans at present to make a statement on the future arrangements for dealing with these instruments.

Student Visits

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will take measures to assist (a) hon. Members, (b) members of the press gallery and (c) officials of the House in giving access to the precincts of the House to work experience/school students. [12032]

Mrs. Roe: The Administration Committee has no responsibility for (a) and (b). With respect to (c), I wish to advise the hon. Gentleman that the Establishments Office of the Finance and Administration Department co-ordinates a work experience scheme through which Departments of the House accommodate students who wish to spend a period of time working at the House of Commons.

Students who express an interest in such work experience are asked to supply details of the type of work in which they are interested and the dates on which they are available. Details are then circulated to departments to ascertain the availability of suitable opportunities.

The Establishment Office endeavours to place 12 students each year for periods of between one and two weeks—more than 20 students have been placed within departments of the House in the last 12 months. The students are not paid, but travelling expenses are re-imbursed.

The education unit has for 17 years arranged a special programme of autumn visits for senior school students, and an extension to this scheme, to run on sitting Wednesdays, was approved in March this year. This is in addition to the large numbers of tours given by hon. Members themselves for individual school parties.

Smoking

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will seek to extend non-smoking policies to the division lobbies and other Members' facilities in the House. [12026]

Mrs. Roe: Hon. Members should be aware already that smoking is not permitted in the Division Lobbies at any time. The Administration Committee has no responsibility for smoking policy in hon. Members' offices—this is a matter for the hon. Member or Members concerned. Similarly, smoking policy in Refreshment Department outlets is a matter for the Catering Committee. However, I shall draw to the attention of my Committee any proposals from hon. Members concerning the possible extension of non-smoking policies to other Members' facilities in the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal Board Housing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will investigate what records of the disposal programme of houses by the Coal Board have been retained by British Coal. [13662]

Mr. Battle: British Coal retains records relating to property sales as long as there remains a prudent commercial reason for so doing. This is generally for a period of 12 years to ensure that British Coal can assess any claims made against it by a purchaser.

Cornish Tin Mining Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action her Department is taking to assist the Cornish tin mining industry. [13225]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 30 October 1997]: Following the announcement on 7 August by South Crofty plc of the intention to close the South Crofty tin mine, officials from the Government Office for the South West have been working closely with the mine on a range of proposals. A delegation led by my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Ms Atherton) met my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms on 10 September. An application from South Crofty plc for regional selective assistance was received by the Department of Trade and Industry on 20 October 1997. The assessment of the application is being given the highest possible priority so that an early decision can be reached. It will be considered against the normal criteria for the scheme. These include demonstrating the viability of the project.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she plans to meet the liquidators of BCCI; and when she expects the next payment to be made to the creditors of BCCI. [14252]

Mrs. Beckett: I have no plans to meet the joint liquidators. The timetable for future payments to creditors is a matter for the liquidators but I understand that they hope to pay a substantial further dividend as soon as possible.

Yemen (Trade Mission)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the recent trade mission to Yemen led by HRH the Duke of Gloucester. [14228]

Mrs. Roche: HRH the Duke of Gloucester visited Yemen from 28 September to 3 October in his capacity as President of the British Consultants Bureau. He was accompanied by 29 representatives of UK companies on a DTI supported trade mission jointly sponsored by the BCB and the Middle East Association. The DTI export promoter and country officer for Yemen were also in attendance.

During this high profile and successful mission, HRH met the President and Vice President of Yemen, the Governors of Taiz and Aden as well as five Ministers, senior Government officials, businessmen and diplomats. HRH attended the missioners' meetings with the Sana's chamber of commerce and the seminar organised by BCB. He also visited Taiz and in Aden he inaugurated the premises of the new consulate-general and opened the new British Council teaching centre. Missioners held a meeting with Aden chamber of commerce and attended briefings on Aden's infrastructure development needs and the port/free zone development.

Small and Medium Enterprises

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she is taking to encourage the establishment and growth of small firms in Staffordshire. [13890]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The Government recognises the vital role that small firms play in a successful enterprise economy and is firmly committed to providing the right conditions for the sector to compete and grow.

Government funding supports initiatives which help both the establishment and growth of small firms in Staffordshire.

Under the first round of the single regeneration budget challenge fund up to £1.28 million over six years has been committed towards establishing 2,000 new businesses and 3,600 jobs in Staffordshire. The Government Office for the West Midlands has contracted with Staffordshire training and enterprise council to manage this programme.

The Government Office also holds an annual contract with the training and enterprise council, worth approximately £1.7 million, to fund Business Link Staffordshire. The purpose of the Business Link is to help small businesses become more competitive, more successful and better able to meet challenges of the next decade. The Business Link offers independent specialist advice to help businesses identify and address their problems through a tailored package of support.

Partnership Legislation

Mr. Timms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when further progress is planned on limited liability partnership legislation. [14580]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We are working towards a policy announcement and publication of draft legislation as soon as possible next year.

Regional Challenge

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if there will be a further round of the regional challenge competition for the allocation of European structural funds grants. [14582]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government has decided that the further round of the regional challenge competition will not go ahead and the prize fund of £160 million will return to the regions eligible for structural funds grants. This will restore decision-making on funding allocations to the regions and relieve local partners of the considerable burden involved in the administration of the challenge approach.

The first round of regional challenge did, of course, produce some imaginative projects with potentially significant regional benefits, and we wish these projects every success. However, the original aims of the challenge can now be achieved through other mechanisms. The new "action plan" approach, to be introduced on a flexible basis in England, will encourage a strong strategic focus on high quality projects which can make a real difference to the regional economy and attract private sector contributions, whilst avoiding the additional administrative burdens of regional challenge.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13586]

Mrs. Roche: The President of the Board of Trade has overall responsibility for the Department's work including that related to the year 2000 compliance of its computer systems. The Department's director of information management and technology, Dick Wheeler, has management responsibility for the core Department's programme of compliance projects and related activities. Chief executives of agencies and other public bodies have similar responsibilities for their programmes.

EU Enlargement

Mr. Coaker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she plans to consult United Kingdom businesses on the enlargement of the EU to the countries of central and eastern Europe. [14579]

Mrs. Roche: Today Lord Simon is publishing a consultation document which seeks the views of UK businesses, consumers and employees on the enlargement of the EU to the countries of central and eastern Europe.

The Government is committed to successful EU enlargement. It will not only enhance the security and stability of the continent, but also introduce 100 million extra consumers into the internal market, bringing greater opportunities for British businesses and greater choice and value for British consumers. We think British businesses appreciate this—indeed, they are already increasingly turning towards these important emerging markets. But enlargement presents major challenges as well as great opportunities for the EU, and we want to be sure that we are representing the interests of UK businesses, employees and consumers as accurately as we can in discussions in Brussels and elsewhere. So I urge all those with an interest in the future development of the EU to take this opportunity to let us know what they think.

I have placed a copy of the consultation document in the library of the House. Copies can be obtained from:

Bio-Technology

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date the ethical and welfare review of bio-technology and the patenting of animals began; and if she will make a statement. [13678]

Mr. Battle: A report produced in 1995 by a committee chaired by Professor Michael Banner and appointed by the then Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food produced a report which considered the ethical implications of emerging technologies in the breeding of farm animals. The committee's review included the question of patenting genetically modified animals.

The DTI is in the process of consulting widely on the question of animal patenting in the context of the proposed directive for the protection of bio-technological inventions.

Export Forum

Mr. Goggins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the conclusions of the Export Forum. [14581]

Mrs. Beckett: "Towards an Export Initiative"—the report of the Export Forum—has today been published and a copy placed in the Library of the House.

The Export Forum was established by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in July of this year. Its remit was to examine the effectiveness of current Government support for UK exporters and to make recommendations for a new export initiative.

The forum has concluded that government has a vital and essential role to play in export promotion. It recommends that the Government could discharge this role more effectively by taking action in the following areas.

- focusing additional effort on a small number of key overseas markets, as opposed to dividing all its effort between 80 "priority markets";
- selecting these markets both with a view to the needs of the new and inexperienced exporter and with a view to helping all exporters attack difficult but promising markets where the UK is currently underperforming;
- incorporating the strengths and priorities of key sectors of UK industry into the planning process, with a better focus on service industries in particular;
- enhancing the support that it gives to UK firms seeking to invest overseas;
- ensuring greater consistency and improved quality in the export services delivered by Business Links and in the chargeable work of FCO posts;
- strengthening the marketing and branding of Government export support to obtain greater coherence and a more customer-friendly interface;
- making greater use of IT and the Internet in delivering services to UK exporters;
- restructuring and strengthening the British Overseas Trade Board as the Government's key advisory body on export promotion.

The Government welcomes the forum's report and the thrust of its recommendations. We will be looking to respond positively and to start work now in many of the areas outlined by the forum as requiring change. Our response in respect of some of the forum's recommendations will need to await the completion of the DTI and FCO comprehensive spending reviews.

European Council

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what documents Her Majesty's Government intends to place before the European Council due to meet in Luxembourg on 21 to 22 November to discuss employment in the European Community; and if he will place in the Library any such submission at least 10 days before that event. [13386]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In the context of the remit established at the Amsterdam European Council, the Government has submitted two papers: "Employment Policies and Initiatives in the UK", July 1997, and "United Kingdom Employment Action Plan", October 1997. Copies of both these papers are in the Library.

WALES

Beta Interferon

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost of prescribing beta interferon in each year since 1995 for each health authority. [13476]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The expenditure on Beta Interferon across the NHS in Wales since 1995 is £8,764. This figure excludes clinical trials for which there is no data available. There is a risk that to provide a more detailed breakdown of this figure might breach patient confidentiality.

Schools (Funding)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the amount of extra funding which will be available for Welsh school education in 1997 as a result of the windfall tax. [14175]

Mr. Hain: £5,025 million capital funding is available this financial year for repair, refurbishment,improvements to school buildings; improvements to school security; and improvements to information technology facilities.

Dental Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest figures (a) in total and (b) by county for the number of dental practitioners in practice in Wales offering treatment on the national health service; and if he will make a statement. [14082]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information is given in the following table. The information is collected on a health authority basis.

(2) how many dental practitioners offering treatment under the national health service there were in practice in Wales in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [14090]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information on the number of general practitioners who treat at least some NHS patients is given in the following table. Information on the number of practitioners only treating patients privately is not collected centrally.

Inward Investment

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs were created or secured by inward investment in each North Wales county in each of the last five years. [14211]

Mr. Hain: The following statistics relate to companies' intentions at the time of the decision to invest and do not take account of any subsequent changes. The employment figures—safeguarded and new combined—are forecasts, not actual, and relate to inward investment from elsewhere in the United Kingdom as well as from overseas.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13626]

Mr. Ron Davis: As Secretary of State I have overall responsibility for ensuring compliance in my Department. The civil servant responsible for Millennium issues within the Department is Dr. A. G. Thornton. In the case of public bodies it is the responsibility of the relevant chief executive.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000; [13624]

(2) what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [13623]

Mr. Ron Davies: My Department has made an assessment of the effect of the millennium date change. I do not expect there to be any major costs involved in ensuring that my Department's computer systems can cater for the year 2000. Cost of future preventative and remedial action on year 2000 will be met from existing PES provision.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if he will make a statement. [13622]

Mr. Ron Davies: The costed action plans for all Departments will be analysed by officials in the central IT unit at the Cabinet Office and the CCTA and the conclusions reported to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who will then inform Parliament. The plans will be exempted from disclosure under the open government code of practice on access to government information which permits non-disclosure prior to an announcement. However, once the announcement has been made the plans will be available to the public.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if he will make a statement. [13625]

Mr. Ron Davies: The central IT unit at the Cabinet Office and its agent the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency set a model timetable for Departments to follow. The Welsh Office has followed this timetable and completed by January 1997 a full survey of the work which needed to be done.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food and Drink Industry

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact on United Kingdom food and drink producers of (a) a national minimum wage, (b) the Government's welfare-to-work proposals and (c) economic and monetary union. [13379]

Mr. Morley: We are aware of some early assessments of policies within the responsibility of other Departments and where many decisions both of principle and of detail remain to be taken. Although we have not at this stage undertaken separate studies of the impact of such policies specifically on United Kingdom food and drink producers, we carefully consider the likely implications for all the sectors for which the Department is responsible.

Bananas

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in respect of imports of bananas into (a) the European Economic Community and (b) the United Kingdom (i) the Community quotas in percentage, approximate tonnage, and value of imports of each of category A, B and C of imports, together with the principal producers in each category, (ii) the approximate difference between the production and selling price to consumers of dollar, category A, and African, Caribbean and Pacific country, category B, African, Caribbean and Pacific country, bananas and (iii) the tonnage and value of banana exports from each Commonwealth source exported to the United Kingdom in the year before and each year since the introduction of the 1993 banana regime. [13388]

Mr. Morley: (i) Twelve African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) countries which traditionally supplied bananas to the EU have individual export allocations under the EU regime. These total 857,700 tonnes of bananas. The countries are Dominica, Grenada, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Jamaica, Belize, Suriname, Cameroon, Cote d'Ivoire, Somalia, Cape Verde and Madagascar.

Other imports of bananas enter the EU within an annual tariff quota; since the enlargement of the EU in 1995 this has been set at 2.553 million tonnes. This figure includes a small allocation for ACP imports outside the traditional quotas. There are three types of licences for importing bananas within the tariff quota: Category A licences (66.5 per cent. of the tariff quota) are allocated on the basis of past trade in third country and non-traditional ACP bananas; Category B licences (30 per cent. of the tariff quota) are allocated on the basis of past trade in EU or traditional ACP bananas; Category C licences (3.5 per cent.) are allocated to traders who do not have a record of trade in bananas before 1993. The tariff quota licences can be used freely to import third-country or non-traditional ACP bananas, i.e. their use is not linked to imports from a particular supplying country. The principal suppliers of bananas within the tariff quota are Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Honduras, Guatemala, Nicaragua and Panama.

The table shows imports from ACP and third country sources into the EU and UK between 1992 and 1996:

European Commission.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to protect the Caribbean banana producers market in the United Kingdom and Europe; and if he will make a statement. [13664]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The Government are considering the World Trade Organisation (WTO) findings on the EU banana regime in liaison with the Commission in Brussels, who have the principal responsibility for the Community's response. We are disappointed by the WTO ruling but we accept that the Community must now set about revising the EU arrangements to bring them into conformity with WTO rules.

The UK's commitment to banana production in the Caribbean is a long-standing one. This Government are in no doubt about the vital importance of the banana industry to the Caribbean and will continue to ensure that the interests of the Caribbean banana growers are fully recognised in the negotiations on the new WTO-consistent arrangements. The Caribbean must be given the opportunity to prove that it can sustain a viable industry committed to providing a good quality product at a competitive price to the European consumer.

Multi-annual Guidance Programme

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the European Commission proposes to apply financial penalties following the report on multi-annual guidance programme III; and if he will make a statement. [13869]

Mr. Morley: Under the terms of Council Regulation 3699/93, Member States which have not complied with their Multi-Annual Guidance Programme (MAGP) objectives are not eligible for EU funding in respect of vessel construction or modernisation grants. It is also open to the European Commission to invoke the provisions of the Treaty in respect of any failure to meet obligations which they consider sufficiently serious.

As far as the Commission's Report on MAGP III is concerned, the section devoted to the UK refers to two outstanding requests for adjustments to our objectives and to the need for certain discrepancies in fleet registers to be corrected.

The Commission subsequently put proposals to the Fisheries Management Committee on 27–28 October which are expected to be adopted shortly. They have the effect of amending the UK MAGP III objectives for the purposes of setting new objectives for MAGP IV. These changes would meet all the points which we have put to the Commission. Details are given in the table.

[2] For MAGP III, there were separate segments for demersal trawls and seines and for nephrops gears. The revised objectives and positions at end–1996 were:

Demersal trawls and seines—GRT objective: 59,470; GRT position: 64,534; Power objective: 316,399; Power position: 332,337.

Nephrops—GRT objective: 18,725; GRT position: 11,036; Power objective: 106,477; Power position: 67,790.

[3] The previous non-active/non-TAC segment has been eliminated by redistributing the vessels and related objectives across the remaining over 10 metre segments.

Sheep

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that sheep exported from the United Kingdom are identified in such a way that they can be traced back to the holding of birth in accordance with the requirement of EC directive 92/102; and if he will make a statement. [13932]

Mr. Rooker: A consultation letter was issued on 13 October 1997 to GB trade organisations seeking their views on changes to the legislation in Great Britain which would enable better tracing of sheep to the holding of birth. The consultation period ends on 24 November 1997. Legislation came into force in Northern Ireland from 1 August 1997 requiring sheep moved from the holding of birth to be identified with a flock or herd mark.

Cows

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of cows of each identifiable breed in (a) the national dairy herd and (b) the national suckler herd. [14178]

Mr. Rooker: The Department collects no information on the breakdown of cattle by breed, but the provisional results for England from the 1997 June Agricultural Census show that there are a total of (a) 1,701,000 cows in the national dairy herd and (b) 798,000 cows in the national suckler herd.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will give in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–00; and if he will make a statement. [13588]

Mr. Morley: The current best estimate of cost for resolving the computer problem for each financial year is as follows:

Expenditure incurred to date (1996–97)	354,000
Expenditure allocated for 1997–98	2,710,000
Expenditure estimated for 1998–99	4,514,000
Expenditure estimated for 1999–2000	1,813,000
Making a total of	9,391,000

Including Agencies, non-IT "embedded chip" aspects and possible replacement of scientific equipment, total final costs are expected to exceed £11 million.

Non-Departmental Public Bodies' costs are not included; all have been contacted and asked to progress required action.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if he will make a statement. [13590]

Mr. Morley: Audits of all the Department's major business-critical systems are now complete. Although the scope of the overall millennium programme continues to widen, all residual audit activity (including that relating to non-IT "embedded chip" aspects and scientific equipment) will be completed by the end of 1997.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13589]

Mr. Morley: It is currently planned that funding for preventive and remedial action to resolve the computer millennium problem will be met from existing PES provision. The estimated costs are shown in the table in the reply given to the hon. Member today; current financial plans include coverage for these figures.

However, some aspects of the programme are still largely an unknown quantity. There is a likelihood, therefore, that some non-critical work may need to be deferred beyond the end-December 1998 target set by the Central IT Unit of the Cabinet Office, that additional funds may need to be sought, or a combination of both.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if he will make a statement. [13587]

Mr. Morley: In compliance with the Government-wide target set by the Cabinet Office's Central IT Unit (CITU), MAFF has submitted an action plan, required by October 1997. The costed action plan will be analysed by CITU and the CCTA and the conclusions reported to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who will then inform Parliament. The plans will be exempted from disclosure under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which permits non-disclosure prior to an announcement. However once the announcement has been made the plans will be available to the public.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13591]

Mr. Morley: The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated bodies. The Director of IT is in charge of the Department's overall Millennium Programme which consists of a number of parallel projects covering different aspects of the Department's computer systems and associated technical infrastructure. The Director (Estates) co-ordinates all aspects of a separate project which has been established to address 'non-IT' equipment containing embedded microprocessor chip technology.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average time taken by his Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13957]

Mr. Morley: The Department receives in excess of 10,000 letters a year from hon. Members. The figures for 1996 were published along with those of other Departments on 17 June 1997, Official Report, column 107–12. So far this year, the Department has received about 6,000 letters, 77 per cent. of which have been replied to within our target of 15 working days.

Cattle Passports

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average length of time taken to process cattle passport applications (a) nationally and (b) in each of the west country offices of MAFF. [13944]

Mr. Rooker: The average processing time for cattle passport applications in England is six working days. The average processing time in each of the west country offices of MAFF is three days (Bristol) and eight days (Exeter).

Poultry (De-beaking)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to outlaw the de-beaking of poultry for non-veterinary reasons; and if he will make a statement. [13687]

Mr. Morley: The current welfare codes make it clear that beak trimming of poultry should be carried out only where necessary to avoid a worse welfare problem such as might be caused by outbreaks of cannibalism in laying hens. We are addressing through our research programme the need to develop commercial systems which can reliably meet the welfare needs of poultry without recourse to this procedure.

The results of these studies will be taken into account in any revisions to the welfare codes and when reviewing the need for further legislative controls.

Fur Farms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department has taken to improve the conditions of animals in the fur farms; and if he will make a statement. [13686]

Mr. Morley: We have already put in place improved arrangements for the monitoring of compliance with existing national legislation protecting the welfare of animals farmed for fur. Internationally we are participating actively in the review of the Council of Europe's recommendation with the aim of ensuring adoption of the highest possible standards consistent with scientific evidence and expert opinion.

Following completion of our recent consultation exercise, we are considering how best to take forward our proposals for ending fur farming in the United Kingdom as soon as practicable.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Official Hospitality

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the total expenditure on official hospitality by his Department in the current Session. [12583]

Angela Eagle: Total expenditure by my Department and its agencies for the previous parliamentary session, ending in July 1997 was £75,000.

Diesel Fuel Subsidies

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information his Department has collated concerning the subsidy policies of EU countries with regard to diesel fuel used by heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [13037]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government collects information concerning taxation and subsidy policies of EU countries on diesel fuel used by heavy goods vehicles from a range of sources. These include the European Commission, other member states, the oil industry, and road haulage industry representatives. An important source of information is the EC Working Document, "vehicle Taxation in the European Union 1997", a copy of which is to be found in the House of Commons Library.

Rivers and Canals (Safety)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure adequate provision of life-saving equipment near rivers and canals. [13328]

Angela Eagle: Provision of life saving equipment is governed by the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. This places a duty on operators of canals and waterways towards members of the public who may be affected by the way in which they carry out their work. The extent to which operators must safeguard the public depends upon the nature of the risks involved and the cost and effectiveness of possible precautions. Relevant factors include the costs of installing life saving equipment, the practicalities of maintaining and protecting it against vandalism and theft, and the availability of someone nearby to deploy it. British Waterways has set up a user safety programme to review the risk to any groups who use its canal network.

"Rural England" White Paper

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the next annual update of the countryside White Paper, "Rural England". [13129]

Angela Eagle: We have no plans to publish an update of the commitments set out in the previous government's Rural White Paper "Rural England".

Jet-skis

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, transport and the Regions what representations he has received urging greater control over jet-skis and similar powered water craft; and if he will make a statement. [13327]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Some 150 responses have been received to wide-ranging consultation exercises intended to establish views on possible improvements to the control of personal watercraft and other non-regulated pleasure vessels. The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions is in an excellent position to bring together those dealing with marine safety, harbours and coastal authorities to review means of improving safety. The responses are being analysed and recommendations are expected to be made to Ministers within the next few months.

Train Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of state for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by train operating company for each of the last 12 months the (a) punctuality targets and (b) levels achieved. [13132]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is published in the Opraf bulletins, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Transport Services (Mill Hill Broadway)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the transport service from Mill Hill broadway; and if he will make a statement. [13118]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have received one representation from the hon. Member, about a decision by Thameslink Trains in respect of a morning peak rail service, and one representation about the price of rail fares which relates to journey from Mill Hill Broadway. I have received no representations relating to bus services in the area.

I expect franchised train operators to alter service patterns over time to respond to demand, and to do this in the interests of their passengers. I understand that Thameslink Trains have made a change to the morning peak timetable in order better to accommodate the passengers expected at that time and to mitigate overcrowding. Thameslink have to meet the Franchising Director's standards in respect of overcrowding, and plan a timetable which complies with their passenger service requirement. Decisions about how they achieve this are a matter for them.

Sea Transport (Fuel)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which ships have been licensed for the sea transport of Mox fuel assemblies to (a) other European Union member states, (b) Japan and (c) other countries from the United Kingdom. [13749]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There is no requirement for United Kingdom ships to be licensed for this purpose. However, the International Maritime Organization has adopted the "Code for the safe Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-Level Radioactive Wastes in Flasks on board ships"—INF code. United Kingdom companies involved in transporting MOX fuel assemblies by sea use ships complying with this code, irrespective of destination.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the level of Government revenue support grant allocated to each local education authority in each metropolitan and London authority for each child in secondary and primary school. [13872]

Mr. Raynsford: Revenue support grant is paid to authorities in support of their general revenues. It is not allocated for particular purposes. The total revenue support grant allocated to each education authority in metropolitan areas and London is shown in the table.

Education Expenditure, Derbyshire

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money has been given to Derbyshire county council in respect of education for each year since the introduction of revenue support grant. [13754]

Mr. Raynsford: The table below shows the education SSA figures for Derbyshire county council, along with Derbyshire's share of the national total, since the introduction of revenue support grant in 1990–91.

Year	Education SSA for Derbyshire (£ million)	Percentage of national total
1990–91	271.798	1.84
1991–92	311.313	1.82
1992–93	329.858	1.80

1996–97[1]	319.922	1.80
1997–98[1,2]	236.431	1.33

[1] SSA figure is not comparable with that for the previous year as a result of changes to the Education SSA formula e.g. removal of further education in 1993–94 from local authority responsibility.
[2] SSA figure is much lower following reorganisation in Derbyshire on 1 April 1997. The total Education SSA of Derbyshire CC and the City of Derby is £320.622 million (1.80 per cent. of the national total).

Wood Dust and Formaldehyde

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the research centres whose work has been evaluated by his Department in respect of research into (a) exposure to fine wood dust and (b) exposure to formaldehyde particles; what contact his Department has had with them; and what contact is planned in the future. [13866]

Angela Eagle: Comprehensive reviews of the international scientific literature were undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and considered by the Health and Safety Commission when advising on the setting of Maximum Exposure Limits for formaldehyde and softwood dusts under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations.

Studies have been carried out on formaldehyde for HSE by the Medical Research Council toxicology unit. HSE has also commissioned work on wood dust with the Health and Safety Laboratory. Future contact will depend on the nature of the new research commissioned and the findings that emerge.

Studies on non-occupational exposure have been carried out for my Department by the Medical Research Council's Institute for Environment and Health and by the Building Research Establishment, where long term studies are continuing. My Department will maintain contact with these research organisations.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the safety exposure limit, in parts per million, for formaldehyde emissions set by (a) the Health and Safety Executive and (b) other EU member states; and what international figures his Department has evaluated. [13865]

Angela Eagle: Formaldehyde has a maximum exposure limit (MEL) of two parts per million for an eight-hour time weighted average and for a 15-minute reference period under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations (COSHH).

The occupational exposure limits for other EU member states and worldwide, where information is available, is in the table below. Under COSHH, employers are required to control exposures to formaldehyde to a level as low as is reasonably practicable and in any case below the MEL. It is therefore misleading to compare the numerical value of the MEL with limits in other countries, where limits have different definitions and applications.

Key

[1] ACGIH: American Conference of Governmental Industrial Hygienists—This is a non statutory body and the limits they prescribe are only a recommendation.

[2] NIOSH: National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health: A research institute whose limits are only advisory.

[3] OSHA: Occupational Safety and Health Administration: The statutory agency whose limits apply by law.

MEL: Maximum exposure limit. MELs have a particular status under COSHH. Under the Regulations, there is a duty to control exposure to substances with a MEL to a level as low as is reasonably practicable, and in any case below the MEL. This duty to reduce exposures thus does not stop once the MEL level has been achieved, but continues until all that is reasonably practicable has been done. This special status of MELs means that it is misleading simply to compare the numerical value of a MEL with a limit that applies in another country, where limits have different definitions and applications.

TWA: Time weighted average. Both the long-term and the short-term exposure limits are expressed as airborne concentrations averaged over a specified period of time. The period for the long-term limit is usually eight hours; the short-term exposure limit (STEL) in the UK is 15 minutes but may be different elsewhere.

Fibreboard

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the health risks associated with medium density fibreboard. [13867]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Executive is conducting a literature review into the health effects of medium density fibreboard (MDF). My Department has commissioned the Medical Research Council's Institute for Environment and Health to carry out a preliminary assessment of the potential risks from the domestic use of MDF. Both those studies complement earlier extensive research and reviews on the possible health risks to which MDF could give rise. Machining of MDF can result in exposure to formaldehyde and wood dust.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning the health risks associated with medium density fibreboard; and if he will publish these. [13868]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has recently received many enquiries about the use of medium density fibreboard from employers, employees, the self-employed, members of the public, trade associations, trade unions and the press.

Two representations have also been received by HSE, one from an individual and another from a trade union. Such representations are normally treated in confidence and HSE will disclose them only with the prior consent of those who made them. These will, however, be taken into account in any future action that may be proposed.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authority homes have been transferred since the inception of the stock transfer policy; what capital receipts have been received as a result of the stock transfer policy; if he will make a statement on the impact of stock transfer policy since 1988; and how much private finance has been attracted to the stock transfer policy. [13977]

Mr. Raynsford: Since 1988, 58 local authorities have completed 63 large scale voluntary transfers of all or part of their housing stock. These transfers have led to the transfer of over 252,000 dwellings, many of the tenants have benefited as a result of increased investment in their homes. So far, transfers have generated over £2.4 billion in capital receipts and raised over £4 billion in private finance for the acquisition, repair and maintenance, and management of the properties.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of (a) the capital repair backlog to council housing in each London borough and (b) the capital spending approved for the current year. [13495]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 3 November 1997]: Authorities' estimates of the cost of the capital work required to their housing stock on 1 April 1996 and the allocations made to local authorities in London for the current financial year under the housing improvement programme are listed in the table.

Local housing authorities are required to submit returns from which the data in column 2 is collected. Local authorities use different methods to produce their estimates. The figures in column 3 are net of allocations for renewal of private sector stock and for disabled facilities grants.

[1] Indicates that authorities were unable to provide precise information, but they were able to provide their best estimates of the need for capital work to their stock.

[2] Indicates that authorities have transferred their entire council housing stock to a registered social landlord and are no longer required to submit the return from which this data is collected.

[3] Indicates that authorities were unable to supply an estimate of the need for capital work to their stock.

The Local Government Finance (Supplementary Credit Approvals) Bill provides the legislative framework for the Capital Receipts Initiative, under which the Government expects to provide additional resources to support local authorities' capital expenditure on housing. The Government plans in the current financial year to make available £174 million under the Initiative to local authorities in England.

Local authority housing benefits from resources provided under other programmes such as the single regeneration budget challenge fund and the estates renewal challenge fund. Local authorities can also use their own resources to support capital expenditure on housing.

Bus Companies

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many national bus companies and municipal bus undertakings were privatised; and how many are still owned by the first owners following privatisation. [13712]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The 72 subsidiaries of the National Bus Company and the 10 companies in the Scottish Bus Group were privatised; 31 municipal bus companies have been sold by the local authorities concerned.

There is no requirement to report to this Department subsequent changes of ownership, which are a matter for the commercial market and, where relevant, the competition authorities.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what decisions were taken at the International Atomic Energy Agency annual general conference held in September in regard to assessment of the adequacy of existing IAEA regulations covering the transport of plutonium and high-level radioactive waste. [13699]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The general conference requested the IAEA to prepare, for its board of governors, a report on legally binding and non-binding international instruments and regulations concerning the safe transport of radioactive materials and their implementation.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to ensure that no local authority will be financially disadvantaged as a result of the scrapping of nursery vouchers. [13898]

Mr. Raynsford: The combined effect of the revenue support grant allocations and specific grants to be given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment will ensure that all authorities are treated fairly, following the abolition of the scheme for nursery vouchers.

Paper Pulp Waste

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the guidelines for controlling the tipping of paper pulp waste from paper manufacture on farmland, upland and moors. [13691]

Angela Eagle: The previous Government's response to the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution's Nineteenth Report on the Sustainable Use of Soil—CO428, January 1997—stated in paragraph 28 that the Water Research Centre and ADAS had been commissioned to develop further the criteria that determine in what circumstances the spreading on land of particular wastes benefit agriculture or result in ecological improvement; and that it would issue for public consultation good practice guidance reflecting the outcome of that research.

The Government plans to fulfil these commitments on receipt from the Environment Agency of the results of the research project. The original research project has been extended by the Environment Agency and is now expected to be completed by the end of March 1998.

Music (Sound Levels)

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list those regulations governing the level of sound played in clubs where music is played; [13706]

(2) what assessment he has made of measures to encourage voluntary limitation of exposure to high decibel noise levels in clubs where music is played; [13708]

(3) what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the long-term effects of unprotected exposure to high levels of sound in clubs where music is played; [13707]

(4) what plans he has to extend existing legislation on noise safety at work to clubs where music is played. [13709]

Angela Eagle: Risks from noise exposure to people who work in clubs are covered by the Noise at Work Regulations 1989, while the health and safety of members of the public who attend clubs is governed by the general requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. There are no plans to change this legislation in relation to clubs.

The licensing of clubs where music is played is the responsibility of the relevant licensing authority. It is for them to attach to licences such conditions as they consider necessary to protect the interests of both those attending the venue and those living nearby.

There has been substantial worldwide research on the effects of noise exposure on hearing, including work commissioned over many years by the Health and Safety Executive. In particular, the Health and Safety Executive published in 1985 a review by the Medical Research Council Institute of Hearing Research of the literature on damage to hearing arising from leisure noise, including noise in discotheques.

There has been no assessment of measures to encourage the voluntary limitation of exposure to high decibel noise levels in clubs where music is played.

Solar Panels

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is considering to increase the installation of solar panels in domestic property and public buildings; and what part he expects this to play in meeting renewable energy targets. [14290]

Angela Eagle: My hon. Friend the Minister of Science, Energy and Industry announced a review of new and renewable energy policy on 6 June, including consideration of what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10 per cent. of the UK's electricity needs from renewables by the year 2010. The Government's support for solar panels will be considered in the context of this review. It is hoped that solar energy will be able to make a worthwhile contribution to UK power needs. However, currently the installation of photovoltaics in the UK is not cost-effective compared with other power generation options.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the number of representations he has received concerning regional development agencies. [14243]

Mr. Caborn: We have received around 1,500 responses to the issues paper on regional development agencies which we published on 11 June.

A1 Red Route (Accidents)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the accident rates on the A1 red route for each of the last four years. [13990]

Ms Glenda Jackson: For the section of the A1 red route from Stirling Corner to its junction with Pentonville Road the accident rates (in injury accidents per 100 million vehicle kilometres) are:

1996: 88

Zoo Directive

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to support the EU zoo directive; and if he will make a statement. [13683]

Angela Eagle: The Government supports efforts to improve zoo standards throughout the Community, which are long overdue. We believe that a directive would be the most effective way to achieve this. In deciding whether to pursue a directive in the Environment Council, we will need to consider whether it would attract sufficient support from other member states to secure its early adoption. We are discussing this with other member states as part of the groundwork for the forthcoming UK Presidency. If a directive is unattainable, the main alternative is to finalise a Council recommendation on zoos, which would be a significant step forward.

Hedgerows

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures his Department has taken to protect hedgerows; and if he will make a statement. [13682]

Angela Eagle: Regulations for the protection of important hedgerows in England and Wales came into force on 1 June 1997. They control the removal of such hedgerows through a system of prior notification to the local planning authority. Although an important first step, we have instigated a review to consider how the regulations might be strengthened so that they give better protection for hedgerows. The review is being undertaken by a group which includes the statutory agencies, local authorities and the main farming and conservation bodies. It has been asked to report its recommendations by the end of December 1997.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to take steps to bring the height of hedges under planning law; and if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the height of hedges. [13945]

Angela Eagle: We have no plans to bring the height of hedges under planning law, but are considering whether there could be a case for some form of Government intervention in what, in general, are disputes between neighbours.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13561]

Angela Eagle: The Minister responsbile is the Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hull, East (Mr. Prescott).

Each central directorate in DETR, executive agency and individual public body is responsible for ensuring compliance for the systems under its control. The Head of DETR's information technology services division has overall responsibility for co-ordinating the central Department's millennium computer compliance.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–00; and if he will make a statement. [13558]

Angela Eagle: The figures are provided in the following table:

	Latest estimate of total cost (£)	Expenditure incurred to date (£)	Expenditure planned for 1997–98 (£)	1998–1999 (£)	1999–2000 (£)
DETR (a)	3 million	0.2 million	1 million	1.5 million	0.5 million
Executive agencies[1]	15.5 million	0.095 million	2.2 million	13.3 million
Other public bodies (b)	375 thousand	25 thousand	70 thousand	210 thousand	95 thousand

[1] For Highways Agency (HA) the Latest Estimate of Total Cost is £15 million, mainly the cost of traffic control systems and the like. HA has not been able to break down Expenditure Planned between 1998–1999 and 1999–2000.

Figures are currently not available for:

(a) Government Offices (GOs).

(b) London Transport (LT). The Chairman of LT has been asked to write to you on this matter.

London Regional Passengers Committee (LRPC)

Northern Lighthouse Board (Scotland and IOM).

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if he will make a statement. [13557]

Angela Eagle: The costed action plans will be analysed by the central IT unit (CITU) and the CCTA and the conclusions reported to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who will then inform Parliament.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if he will make a statement. [13560]

Angela Eagle: In DETR, auditing was completed in October 1997.

In the Government offices for the regions, scoping of systems is being finalised and audits will follow.

In the executive agencies, half had completed their audits in the first half of 1997. Some agencies have conducted audits in two stages with a high level audit already complete and a second more detailed investigation either under way or planned for early 1998.

In the other public bodies, auditing has been completed in a minority, is under way in others, and, in all cases, is planned to be completed by mid 1998.

Mr Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13559]

Angela Eagle: The cost of preventive and remedial action on year 2000 will be met from existing PES provision.

Traffic Speed (Central London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish his Department's estimates of traffic speed in central London for each of the past 10 years; and if he will give the estimate for the current year so far. [13989]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Published estimates of average traffic speeds (mph) in central London since 1968 are as follows:

	Morning peak	Daytime off-peak	Evening peak
1968	12.7	12.1	11.8
1971	12.9	12.6	12.7
1974	14.2	12.9	13.2
1977	12.3	12.6	11.9
1980	12.1	11.6	12.2
1983	11.8	11.9	11.5
1986	11.5	11.0	11.0
1990	10.3	10.6	10.3
1994	10.9	10.9	10.8

Morning peak: 7.45 am–9.15 am
Daytime off-peak: 10.00 am–4.00 pm
Evening peak: 4.45 pm–6.15 pm

Speed surveys in central, inner and outer London are conducted on a rotating basis, with each of these areas surveyed every three to four years. Data from the recently completed 1997 central survey are currently being validated and the survey results will be available later this year.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average time taken by his Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13949]

Angela Eagle: My Department seeks to answer letters from all hon. Members within 15 working days. As indicated by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in his reply to the hon. Member for Walsall, North, (Mr. Winnick) on 3 November, Official Report, column 5, it has been customary for the Government to publish annual statistics showing Departments' and agencies' performance against their targets for reply to ministerial correspondence. The 1996 figures were published on 17 June 1997, Official Report, columns 107-12.

Genetically Modified Maize

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will support the stance of Austria and Luxembourg on GM maize at the article 21 Committee meeting on 5 November; and if he will make a statement. [13689]

Angela Eagle: I am considering the UK's position and I will write to the hon. Gentleman once we have reached a conclusion.

White Rock Business Park, Paignton

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce the result of the inquiry into the proposed White Rock Business Park, Paignton. [13245]

Mr. Caborn: As the hon. Member will now be aware, my letter of 29 October 1997 announced the Secretary of State's decision to refuse consent for a planning application by Sir Robert McAlpine Ltd for a business park at White Rock, Paignton.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has issued concerning the erection of telecommunications masts. [14543]

Mr. Caborn: Current planning policy guidance on telecommunication development is set out in planning policy guidance note 8 (PPG8 revised December 1992). That guidance reflects the importance attached to keeping to a minimum the number of telecommunications masts, and of sites for such installations. At paragraph 27, the PPG states that the sharing of masts will help to achieve this aim, where such sharing is practicable, as will the use of existing buildings to site new antennas. Telecommunications operators, licensed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under the Telecommunications Act 1984, are required by their licence conditions to take all reasonable steps to investigate the possibility of mast sharing. We already advise local planning authorities in the PPG that they may reasonably expect applicants for planning permission for large masts to show evidence that they have explored the possibility of erecting antennas on an existing building, mast or other structure.

It will henceforth be our policy to extend this guidance to the development of smaller masts, particularly those which are permitted under Part 24 of Schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995. Where an operator seeks a prior approval determination for a mast under that Order, clear evidence should be presented to the local planning authority that the operator has investigated carefully the siting of antennas on existing buildings or other structures, including masts. This is a further factor to consider alongside the sitting factors set out in appendix E to Department of the Environment circular 9/95. If the evidence regarding the consideration of such alternative sites is not considered satisfactory, the planning authority, or the Secretary of State on appeal, may be justified in refusing approval to the mast's siting.

Operators will be assisted in exploring alternatives to new mast development by the register of mast sites maintained by the Radiocommunications Agency. Operators and local planning authorities can now access that information which should help in the consideration of alternative sites that have already been cleared for radio transmission purposes.

SCOTLAND

Health Living

12. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State what discussions he has had with the Greater Glasgow health board and other bodies in Glasgow on healthy living initiatives. [12049]

Mr. Galbraith: My right hon. friend has had no discussions with the Greater Glasgow Health Board or other bodies in Glasgow in healthy living initiatives. However, within the context of the Glasgow Healthy Cities Partnership, which provides a focus for community-based health promotion action within the East End of Glasgow, he is aware of a number of initiatives such as the Possil Stress Centre and I have myself visited the Centre for Women's Health and Eastbank Health Promotion Centre. These are all initiatives which I commend.

The hon. Member's record of campaigning against drugs is well known and he is to be commended for it. I was pleased to receive a proposal from COSLA to provide funding for two years for the appointment of a drug misuse co-ordinator. I am pleased to announce that the Government supports this proposal and I have asked officials to discuss the arrangements with COSLA in order to bring it about.

Criminal Cases Review Authority

13. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State when he expects to establish a criminal cases review authority; and if he will make a statement. [12051]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend is aiming to have the Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission in operation by 1 April 1999.

Fisheries (Quota Hopping)

14. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State when he last met European Fisheries Ministers to discuss the problem of quota hopping in Scottish waters. [12052]

Mr. Chisholm: My noble Friend, the Minister for Fisheries at The Scottish Office attended a meeting of the Council of European Fisheries Ministers on 30 October. Quota hopping was not on the agenda and was not discussed. Fisheries Departments are continuing to develop proposals to tackle this issue, in consultation with industry and the Commission, following the exchange of letters between the Prime Minister and the Commission President in June.

Devolution

15. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the additional costs to public funds which would stem from the devolution proposals. [12053]

Mr. McLeish: The costs of the devolution proposals will be met from within existing public expenditure provision.

Dearing and Garrick Reports

16. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many submissions he received in response to his Department's consultation on the Dearing and Garrick reports. [12054]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received 46 submissions in response to his Department's consultation on the Dearing and Garrick reports.

Scotch Whisky Association

17. Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Scotch Whisky Association to discuss the future development of the industry in Scotland. [12055]

Mr. Wilson: I and my right hon. Friend are in regular informal contact with The Scotch Whisky Association. In addition my right hon. Friend is due to meet the Association on 21 November.

Health Boards

18. Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State when he next plans to meet the chairmen of the health boards in Scotland to discuss the reduction of bureaucracy. [12056]

Mr. Galbraith: I meet Chairmen of Health Boards regularly to discuss matters of current interest including the reduction of bureaucracy.

New Prisons

19. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State what discussions he has had with the Home Secretary about the use of the private finance initiative to finance new prisons. [12057]

Mr. McLeish: Discussions on this issue are still taking place between officials, including whether the use of private finance would offer value for money where custodial services were provided by the public sector. It is as yet too early to predict the outcome of this work.

Nursery Education

21. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the future availability of nursery education combined with day care. [12059]

Mr. Wilson: Our first priority is to offer pre-school education to all children in their pre-school year, as we undertook in the Manifesto and I shall be issuing a major consultation paper on pre-school education later in the autumn. We shall move as soon as practicable thereafter to consider associated daycare needs, as well as the extension of pre-school education to younger children.

Agriculture

22. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to discuss Scottish agriculture with his European Union counterparts. [12060]

Mr. Chisholm: My noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for Agriculture, the Environment and Fisheries has recently met both Commissioner Fischler and the Finnish Agriculture Minister to discuss Scottish agriculture. He also attended the October Agriculture Council. He will undertake further discussions and attend further meetings of the Agriculture Council as appropriate.

Referendum

23. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scots not currently resident in Scotland who were excluded from voting in the recent referendum. [12061]

Mr. McLeish: Around 100 representations have been received in writing together with a number of telephone enquiries seeking clarification about eligibility to vote.

Eligibility to vote in the referendum was determined by residency in Scotland. This reflected the fact that the Scottish Parliament will mainly affect people resident in Scotland.

Eligibility to vote was debated at length during the passage of the Referendums (Scotland and Wales) Bill earlier this year.

Class Sizes

24. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State when he expects to meet his target for class sizes of 30 pupils. [12062]

Mr. Wilson: Our intention is to achieve class sizes of 30 pupils or fewer in the first three years of primary school by the end of this Parliament.

Funding

25. Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State what discussions he has had with Her Majesty's Treasury regarding the size of the Scottish block. [12063]

Mr. Dewar: The size of the Scottish block is set for this year and next by the published expenditure plans and the July Budget announcements. The figures for subsequent years will depend on the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review in comparable English departments, which will feed into the block through the normal operation of the Barnett formula.

Forestry Commission

26. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State what are his plans for the Forestry Commission after Scottish devolution with particular reference to its responsibilities outside Scotland. [12064]

Mr. Chisholm: After devolution, the functions of the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales, in relation to forestry, will be transferred to the Scottish Executive and the Welsh Assembly respectively. The Commission will, however, continue to be the Government Department with responsibility for forestry throughout Britain.

Caledonian MacBrayne

27. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State what plans he has to meet the managing director of Caledonian MacBrayne to discuss its ferry services. [12065]

Mr. Chisholm: My right hon. Friend met with the Managing Director of Caledonian MacBrayne on 1 August, and I met with the Chairman and previous Managing Director on 24 June. Neither I nor my right hon. Friend are planning to have a further meeting with the company's Managing Director at the present time. However, Scottish Office officials maintain frequent contact with the company's executive directors in connection with all aspects of Caledonian MacBrayne's business activities.

Health Service

28. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his planned increased in health expenditure in Scotland for 1998–99. [12066]

Mr. Galbraith: Net expenditure in Scotland in 1998–99 is planned to be £4,581 million, which is an increase of £205 million or 4.7 per cent. over 1997–98 planned expenditure.

Residential and Nursing Homes

29. Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to modify the regulations governing the registration and inspection of residential and nursing homes for the elderly. [12067]

Mr. Galbraith: The Scottish Office issued guidance to Health Boards and interested parties on 8 July this year on national core standards for the registration, operation and inspection of nursing homes. Following consultation, guidance will be issued soon to local authorities on the registration and inspection of residential care homes. Legislation on the regulation and inspection of residential and nursing home care and domiciliary care will follow when a suitable opportunity presents.

Degrees Course Tuition Fees

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the annual tuition fees for a four-year degree course at universities in Scotland from September 1998 for students from (a) Scotland, (b) England and Wales and (c) EU countries. [13363]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 30 October 1997]: The tuition fees which will apply to new students entering higher education in session 1998–99 are expected to be £1,000 and will be increased in line with inflation for subsequent years. New entrants in session 1997–98, existing students and those with a confirmed place by 1 August 1997 for 1998 will not be affected. For Scottish and EU students undertaking an Honours degree course at a Scottish university, which is a year longer than comparable courses elsewhere in the UK, The Scottish Office will waive the student's tuition fee in the final year and pay the fee to the institutions directly. Some students will be exempt altogether from making a contribution toward tuition fees throughout their higher education, dependent on family circumstances. Further details will be made available in a leaflet, a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Health Education

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the findings of the project funded jointly by his Department and the Health Education Board for Scotland to formulate the planning and provision of health education, including drug education, in Scottish teacher education institutions; and if he will make a statement. [13219]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 30 October 1997]: The project referred to is not a research project. Its purpose was to make it easier for teacher educators and their students to acquire the relevant knowledge and insights to deliver health education in schools. Health education and promotion are central to the curriculum and ethos of primary, secondary and special schools in Scotland. Our new teachers must, therefore, be well prepared for their responsibilities in teaching their pupils about health and in encouraging them to develop healthy styles of living. The project has been under way since April 1996 and will be completed in April 1998. From the start, it has been a co-operative venture involving staff from each of the teacher education institutions (TEIs), and representatives from the Health Education Board for Scotland (HEBS), the General Teaching Council and the Scottish Office Education and Industry Department (SOEID). The materials developed are to be made available to each of the TEIs to be adapted to fit their own courses. The materials, which are based on existing good practice in health education, will be relevant to students preparing to work with all children and young people of primary and secondary school age.

Scottish Parliament

20. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State if he will make a statement on the proposed powers of the Scottish Parliament in relation to European Union matters. [12058]

Mr. McLeish: The Government's proposals for involving the Scottish Parliament in relations with the European Union are set out in Chapter 5 of the White Paper, "Scotland's Parliament".

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress in choosing a site for the Scottish Parliament. [14674]

Mr. McLeish: We will select a site for the new Scottish Parliament as soon as possible, in the light of the best available information. This information must include independent costings of building construction or conversion projects on the possible sites. My Department has today commissioned design feasibility studies, an independent costing exercise and a transport and environmental impact assessment.

Page and Park Architects of Glasgow will look at how best to fit the needs of the Scottish Parliament into and around St. Andrews House on Calton Hill. Benson and Forsyth Architects, will look at how an appropriate building could best be placed on the site at Leith. RMJM (Scotland) will consider the design of a building for the Haymarket site.

The Glasgow office of quantity surveyors and cost consultants, Davis Langdon and Everest, is being asked to prepare comparative costings on the basis of the design feasibility studies.

Scott, Wilson, Kirkpatrick and Partners of Glasgow have also been commissioned to carry out a transport and environmental impact assessment on the sites under consideration.

The firms concerned have been asked to complete their work by mid-December. The total cost of the various studies is estimated to be about £250,000. This is a small fraction of the estimated cost of the building and will help the Government to reach a much better-informed view on the suitability of the possible sites.

Health Trust Deficits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) actual deficits and (b) projected deficits of each health trust as a percentage of their budgets for the last three years. [14273]

Mr. Galbraith: In 1994–95, one Trust reported a retained deficit as a result of a loss on disposal of fixed assets. In 1995–96, two Trusts reported retained deficits, which were technical in nature, as a result of a loss on disposal of fixed assets. In 1996–97, three Trusts reported retained deficits. Fife Healthcare experienced a deficit of £1.9 million as a result of a funding gap and the Victoria Infirmary's deficit of £6 million was caused by a combination of loss on disposal of fixed assets of £4.2 million and £1.8 million due to financial difficulties. One other Trust had a deficit which was technical in nature as a result of loss on disposal of fixed assets.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if he will make a statement. [13595]

Mr. Dewar: My Department and associated agencies completed audits for Year 2000 computer compliance purposes on 8 October 1997. Responsibility for ensuring millennium compliance in other public bodies rests with the bodies themselves.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if he will make a statement. [13592]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Office has sent an updated report on the computer millennium problems to the Central Computing and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA). Reports from all Departments will be analysed by the Central Information Technology Unit and the CCTA. The conclusions will be reported to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who will then inform Parliament.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will give in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–00; and if he will make a statement; [13593]

(2) if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13594]

Mr. Dewar: It is not possible at this stage to predict accurately the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem across my Department, its Agencies and other public bodies. However it is expected that the cost of Year 2000 preventative and remedial action will be met within existing planned financial provision.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13596]

Mr. Dewar: I intend to retain overall responsibility for millennium computer compliance matters within my Department. The Director of Telecommunications is responsible for the compliance programme within The Scottish Office. Responsibility for ensuring millennium compliance in other public bodies rests with the bodies themselves.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Medical Students

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students applied for admission to medical schools this autumn, and how many were admitted; how many of those admitted, achieved three A grades at A level; how many had lower grades; and how many students with three A grades failed to secure a place. [13310]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is not held centrally or is not yet available. Information on applications received up to May 16 by subject were released by the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) in their press notice in June 1997. Fuller information on applicants by subject together with information on acceptances by subject and entry qualifications will be published by UCAS in their annual report in spring 1998. These figures will not, however, analyses the entry qualifications held by applicants who were not accepted.

Employment Service

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what assessment he has made of (a) the effectiveness of the Employment Service's preferred supplier system for administering contracts with third-party suppliers and (b) the reaction of the agencies which deal with young people to the administrative processes involved; [13510]

(2) how much it cost the Employment Service on average to place a young person in work through a jobcentre in the last year for which figures are available; [13511]

(3) how many young people the Portsmouth jobcentre has placed in work through jobcentre notices in the latest 12-month period for which figures are available; [13512]

(4) what assessment he has made of the planning undertaken by Employment Service managers in each district in Hampshire in relation to delivery of the new deal. [13513]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for replies to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 4 October 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question regarding the average cost of placing a young person into work. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive.

The Employment Service does not separately monitor the average cost of placing a young person into work. It is required, by its annual agreement with the Department for Education and Employment, to monitor and report the average cost of placing an unemployed person into work (regardless of age). The last year for which this figure is available is 1996–97, when the average cost was £234.

In addition to this, the Employment Service also monitors the average cost of placing a long term unemployed person into work (£431 in 1996–97) and the average cost of placing a person with a disability into work (£321 in 1996–97). Neither of these unit costs are analysed by age of client and there are, at present, no plans to do so.

I hope this is helpful.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 4 October 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the effectiveness of the Employment Service preferred supplier system and the reaction of agencies who deal with young people to the administrative processes involved.

I am satisfied that the preferred supplier system being used by the Employment Service is effective in helping both it and potential contractors to make the best use of their resources. The Employment Service benefits from the ability to invite competitive tenders from a manageable number of organisations, while potential contractors benefit from knowing that their bid will be taken seriously.

This approach is being used for Employment Service programmes designed to help unemployed people of all ages to improve their prospects of finding work. The Employment Service, is not, however, operating a preferred supplier system for the New Deal initiative for young people aged 18–24.

Organisations have generally accepted the rationale behind the preferred supplier system in relation to established programmes, and I am not aware of any problems—either from agencies dealing with young people or from others—about the administrative processes involved. I would, of course, be happy to look into any specific issues of which you are aware.

I hope this is helpful.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 4 October 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question requesting information about young people placed into employment by Portsmouth Employment Service Jobcentre during the latest 12 month period. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The two Employment Service Jobcentres in Portsmouth—Portsmouth North and Portsmouth Central—placed 920 young people aged 16–24 into employment in the 12 months ending September 1997.

I hope this is helpful.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 4 October 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question relating to the planning undertaken by Employment Service managers in each district in Hampshire with respect to New Deal delivery.

All New Deal district plans are due to be assessed by regional assessment panels starting next week. These panels, which will include senior Employment Service management, Government Office Directors and senior employer and voluntary sector representatives, will assess plans against agreed criteria to establish whether they represent robust and realistic proposals to implement New Deal. Where necessary, the panel will require plans to be amended or, in extremis, recast to ensure that this is so.

Delivery planning for New Deal in all Employment Service districts has been subject to progress monitoring and reporting on a fortnightly basis since the end of August 1997. The latest fortnightly progress reports (for the period ending 20 October 1997) show that the Employment Service Hampshire districts of Mid-Hants, Portsmouth, Southampton and Guildford, which covers parts of Hampshire, are all on course to submit their delivery plans on time for regional assessment. All plans, once approved, will be published.

If you have any specific concerns my Director for London and the South East, Richard Foster (tel: 0171 211 4395), will be happy to discuss them with you.

I trust that this is helpful.

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not collected centrally in the form requested. The following table shows Derbyshire local education authority's total net expenditure on its school catering service from 1986–87 to 1995–96, the latest year for which data are available.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if he will make a statement; [13577]

(2) what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–00; and if he will make a statement; [13578]

(3) if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000; [13579]

(4) when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if he will make a statement; [13580]

(5) which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13581]

Dr. Howells: My Department has assessed carefully and systematically the extent to which its processes and outputs would be vulnerable to disruption from the computer millennium problem. We have defined the scope of the problem and realistically assessed the risks; planned for the effective testing of solutions; initiated the preparation of contingency plans and are taking steps to strengthen contracts with suppliers. Compliance audits of the Department's IS/IT systems were completed in August 1997: those for the Employment Service were completed in September 1997. Steps have been taken to ensure that all of the agencies and non-departmental public bodies that are answerable to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment are adopting a comparably rigorous approach.

The estimated cost of securing full millennium compliance of DfEE's IS/IT is £4.55 million, of which £1.08 million will be spent in 1997–98 and the remainder in 1998–99. The current comparable estimate for the Employment Service is £23.15 million—£0.95 million in 1997–98, £20.7 million in 1998–99 and £1.5 million in 1999–2000. The cost of securing millennium compliance of embedded chips in the Department's building control and associated systems is estimated at £0.25 million, which will be spent in 1998–99. The necessary funding is being found from existing financial provision.

I am the Minister with overall responsibility for the Department's year 2000 compliance programme. The civil servant with overall responsibility in DfEE is Mr. Kenneth Jordan, the head of procurement and contracting who is also responsible for assessing the extent of the vulnerability to year 2000 problems in the key parts of the Department's supply chain. The civil servant with overall responsibility in the Employment Service is Mr. Ray Phillips, the director of policy and process design.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average time taken by his Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13948]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to a similar question from my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 3 November, Official Report, column 5.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Six-month Entry Visas

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many six-month entry visas to the United Kingdom were granted by the entry clearance section in Bangkok in each of the last two years for which statistics are available; and how many applications were rejected. [12574]

Mr. Fatchett: The majority of visas for the UK are valid for presentation at a port within six months of date of issue. It is then for an immigration officer to determine the period of stay. The total number of visas including settlement visas issued in Bangkok was as follows:

Of these, the total number of non-settlement visas issued and refused was:

	1995	1996
Granted	49,863	50,253
Refused	830	1,138

The number of multiple entry visas valid for presentation for six months granted and refused in Bangkok was:

	1995	1996
Granted	7,830	8,927
Refused	72	116

Cuba

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with Cuba. [12763]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have normal diplomatic relations with Cuba and support normal trade relations in civil goods and services. UK firms are encouraged to exploit the growing civil market opportunities which arise as Cuba undergoes a process of economic liberalisation. We continue to urge the Cuban Government to reach an early settlement of outstanding debt to ECGD and UK firms.

We and EU partners share the goal of a peaceful transition to democracy in Cuba. We favour constructive engagement not isolation. The EU adopted a common position on Cuba on 2 December 1996, reaffirming the EU's commitment to promoting political, economic and human rights reform in Cuba. This was presented to the Cuban Government on 21 July and we look forward to furthering this dialogue.

Israeli Service Men

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will endeavour to locate the Israeli service men Zachary Baumel, Yehuda Katz, Zvi Feldman and Ron Arad, to obtain news of their welfare and to negotiate for their release from captivity. [13111]

Mr. Fatchett: Efforts to establish the fate of missing Israeli service men have been hindered by the lack of information about which organisations are holding them.

Nevertheless, we support all efforts to obtain information on their fate. This message was underlined when I took part in a satellite link-up with members of the Knesset in May to mark Ron Arad's birthday. I also raised the case when I visited Syria later that month.

We shall continue to raise the cases of these service men whenever the opportunity arises.

Immigration Correspondence

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the staffing levels of the migration and visa correspondence unit on 1 October (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [13998]

Mr. Fatchett: The answer is as follows:

(a) 13

(b) 12

(c) 12 permanent, four temporary.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will create a dedicated unit to deal with hon. Members' correspondence at the migration and visa correspondence unit. [14001]

Mr. Fatchett: The migration and visa correspondence unit's primary role is to deal with members' correspondence, which accounts for the greater part of its workload.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many complaints have been received about the level of service of the migration and visa correspondence unit in the last 12 months. [14002]

Mr. Fatchett: Our correspondence statistics are not broken down in a way that enables complaints to be identified separately. To provide the information requested would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time taken by the migration and visa correspondence unit to answer correspondence from an hon. Member. [14000]

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time between hon. Members writing on behalf of constituents in immigration and related cases and the reply being sent to the hon. Member. [13198]

Mr. Fatchett: As the result of a 35 per cent. increase in correspondence from Members since the general election the migration and visa correspondence unit has been unable to maintain its normal target of a reply within 15 working days. The average time for non-urgent correspondence is currently five weeks. Extra staff have been deployed with the aim of eliminating delays.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters were received by the migration and visa correspondence unit in each month of 1997. [13999]

Mr. Fatchett: The migration and visa correspondence unit has received the following number of letters from Members:

	Number
January	556
February	517
March	459
April	600
May	427
June	982
July	1,278
August	1,158
September	956
Total	6,933

In addition, 4,461 letters were received during the same period from other correspondents.

Congo

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will investigate human rights abuses relating to the disappearance of refugees from the camps south of Kisangari in rebel-held Congo-Zaire; and if he will make a statement. [13976]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We fully support the mission of the UN human rights inquiry team in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The inquiry team will investigate alleged human rights violations between 1993 and 1997—including the disappearance of refugees from the Kisingani area—throughout the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo; what diplomatic relations the United Kingdom has with that country; and if he will make a statement. [13501]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 3 November 1997]: We enjoy normal diplomatic relations with the Democratic Republic of the Congo. HM ambassador and diplomatic staff in Kinshasa are in regular contact with all levels of the Government, and I met President Kabila during the EU ministerial troika visit to Kinshasa on 4–5 August. We have made clear that our future relationship with the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including the resumption of development assistance, is conditional upon respect for democracy, human rights and the rule of law.

NATO Expansion

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the (a) civilian and (b) political elements of NATO expansion. [13917]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: At the Madrid summit in July NATO member states invited the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland to begin accession discussions. We expect these to be completed in time for my right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary to be able to sign accession protocols at the North Atlantic Council on 16 December. After ratification of the three Protocols by all 16 NATO allies the three new members would enter the political, military and civil structures of the alliance. NATO's existing political consultations, civil emergency planning, economic, scientific and environmental activities will all involve the new member states.

UN Disarmament Debate

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters in regard to the retention of nuclear weapons by the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council have been raised by nations addressing the United Nations First Committee on Disarmament and International Security in its annual debate. [13748]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Questions of nuclear disarmament were widely discussed in the First Committee's general debate. Progress by the US and Russia on reductions of their nuclear forces through the bilateral START negotiations was widely welcomed. Other issues relevant to the retention of nuclear weapons by the nuclear weapon states included the comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty, a fissile material cut-off treaty, the International Court of Justice's advisory opinion on the threat or use of nuclear weapons, nuclear weapon free zones and security assurances.

Kenya and Uganda

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current human rights situations in Kenya and Uganda. [13927]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We strongly believe that the Governments of Kenya and Uganda should meet their obligations under the international human rights instruments to which they are parties. I raised the human rights situation in Kenya, including the concerns set out by Amnesty International, with President Moi and Attorney General Wako when I visited Nairobi in June. In Uganda we have condemned atrocities committed by the Lord's Resistance Army against the Acholi people in the north. We continue to make clear to the Ugandan Government that operations by their security forces must conform with international human rights standards.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United Kingdom's European partners on the repeal of article 223 of the treaty of Rome. [13857]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There have been no such discussions.

Sea Level Rises

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decisions were taken at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Scotland to assist small low-lying island states threatened by sea level rises. [13751]

Mr. Fatchett: Small island developing states are particularly vulnerable to rise in sea level as a result of global warming. Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Edinburgh discussed the threat of climate change and called for developed countries to pursue significant reductions in their greenhouse gas emissions at December's Kyoto negotiations. They also agreed to initiate action in the international community to strengthen assistance to small states which suffer the effects of natural disasters.

Arms Exports

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United Kingdom's European partners on the development of a common policy on arms exports. [13858]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have discussed the possibility of a code of conduct informally with a number of partners, and will formally take forward an initiative during our Presidency of the European Union in early 1998.

Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards the expansion of the OSCE. [13918]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are committed to strengthening the OSCE's role in conflict prevention, including through support for the work of its Missions in the field. Together with EU partners we are also contributing actively to the development within the OSCE of a security model for Europe.

United Nations Day

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives Her Majesty's Government took in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) British overseas territories, (c) the United Nations in New York and (d) the United Nations in Geneva to mark United Nations Day on 24 October. [13747]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Staff at the United Nations in New York and Geneva attended special commemorative events. We took no specific initiatives to mark United Nations Day.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral statement of 28 October, Official Report, columns 700–02, if Her Majesty's Government have had sight of that part of the Lockerbie evidence held by the United States. [13934.]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 3 November 1997]: As my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office, told the hon. Member on 30 October, Official Report, column 876, there has been very full co-operation throughout the investigation between the Scottish and United States authorities. Appropriate arrangements have been made for the sharing of information and evidence.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral statement of 28 October, Official Report, column 700–02, what evidence he has now evaluated to establish that, with the exception of Mr. and Mrs. Cohen, the majority of US relatives do not want a trial outside the US or Scotland. [13936]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 3 November 1997]: Our embassy in Washington is in touch with a number of American Lockerbie relatives, some of whom represent groups of other families. I understand that most favour trial in Scotland or the United States, in accordance with the UN Security Council resolutions.

"Victims of Flight 103"—the group which represents the largest number of American relatives, shares this view.

The US Administration, on the basis of its contacts with a wide range of the families, also believes that the overwhelming majority are opposed to a trial outside the United States or Scotland.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral statement of 28 October, Official Report, columns 700–02, for what reasons it is not possible to mount a prosecution of Libyan suspects for the Lockerbie bombing in Scotland without the co-operation of the US authorities. [13935]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The UK and US authorities have co-operated closely throughout this investigation. As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary told the House on 28 October, Official Report, column 700–01, it would not be possible to mount a prosecution without the co-operation of the US authorities who hold part of the evidence.

Human Rights

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have been held with the Government of Ghana concerning human rights abuses; and if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Ghana. [13665]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 3 November 1997]: We have not held any recent discussions with the Government of Ghana concerning human rights. We continue to monitor the human rights situation in Ghana closely, and raise specific issues with the Commission for Human Rights and Administrative Justice.

We have excellent bilateral relations with Ghana.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the Government of Sri Lanka concerning the conflict with Tamil groups; what mediation services have been offered; and if he will make a statement. [13667]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 3 November 1997]: We have regular discussions with the Sri Lankan Government on a range of issues, including their efforts to find a resolution to the ethnic conflict. We have said publicly that we stand ready to help in those efforts if both sides ask us to play a role.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by the Government to the Government of Algeria concerning human rights abuses; and if he will make a statement. [13488]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 3 November 1997]: I continue to be seriously concerned about the security situation in Algeria. I condemn the violence unreservedly and call on those responsible to end the appalling atrocities which have been inflicted on innocent civilians for much too long. We urge the Algerian Government and all interested parties to find early solutions to this major internal problem. I was concerned to learn about reports of fraud in the local and municipal elections held on 23 October 1997 and hope that the Algerian Government will continue to make active progress in its programme of democratisation.

Individual Cases (Ministerial Meetings)

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many requests since 1 May he and his Ministers have received from hon. Members to discuss individual cases; and how many of these have been granted. [13878]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 3 November 1997]: I regret that we do not keep records that would enable us to answer this question. Requests from hon. Members to discuss individual cases are not declined.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made by Her Majesty's Government after 1 May concerning reform of the European Court of Justice. [14411]

Mr. Doug Henderson: None. There was little support for such reform in the intergovernmental conference.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the additional areas in which the European Court of Justice will gain jurisdiction as a result of the Amsterdam treaty; [14408]

(2) if he will make a statement on the jurisdiction of the European Court of Justice over the third pillar of the European Union following the Amsterdam treaty. [14409]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter) on 18 July, Official Report, column 360.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time taken by his Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13950]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 3 November, Official Report, column 5.

In 1996 Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers replied to 10,674 letters from hon. Members, of which 94 per cent. were replied to within the target of 10 working days.

Social Chapter

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the powers available under the social chapter of the treaty of European Union are subject to qualified majority voting. [14406]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The agreement on social policy allows for legislation to be adopted in 10 different areas. Five of these are subject to qualified majority voting.

Amsterdam Treaty

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the additional powers gained by the European Parliament as a result of the treaty of Amsterdam. [14412]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter) on 18 July, Official Report, column 361.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional legislation will be required in the United Kingdom to implement the provisions of article 141 of the treaty establishing the European Community, as amended by the treaty of Amsterdam, relating to equal pay for work of equal value; and if he will make a statement. [14310]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The amendments to the EC Treaty provided for in the treaty of Amsterdam will be implemented in the UK by the European Communities (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has consulted other departments in assessing the legal implications of article 137 of the treaty establishing the European Community as amended by the Amsterdam treaty as concerns increased litigation in the areas so covered. [14270]

Mr. Doug Henderson: All Government departments with an interest were involved in preparing our negotiating position for Amsterdam.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals are currently being prepared at European Union level to assist harmonisation in the fields of the promotion of (a) employment (b) improved living conditions and (c) improved working conditions, under article 136 of the treaty establishing the European Community, as amended by the treaty of Amsterdam. [14312]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No proposals are planned under article 136.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if decisions to impose sanctions under the common foreign and security policy of the European Union under the provisions of the Amsterdam treaty will be taken by qualified majority voting. [14410]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Under the Amsterdam treaty unanimity will remain the general rule for decision making in the common foreign and security policy, including for the imposition of any sanctions. However, the treaty also provides for the Council to act by qualified majority when taking decisions based on a common strategy, or when implementing a joint action or common position. But any member state may block such a decision for important and stated reasons of national policy.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the status of the agreement on quota hopping reached at the Amsterdam summit. [14407]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In an exchange of letters at Amsterdam between my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the President of the European Commission, the Commission set out measures we can take to address the problem of quota hopping. The Commission confirmed that the UK can require UK-flagged vessels to demonstrate that their activities contribute substantial economic benefits for populations dependent on fishing and related industries in the UK. Fisheries departments are currently working up a package of measures based on the Commission guidance in consultation with the fishing industry.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the institutions referred to as management and labour in section 4 of article 137 and section 1 of article 139 of the treaty establishing the European Community as amended by the Amsterdam treaty, include institutions other than the Social Partners; and if he will make a statement. [14311]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Social partners is simply another way of describing representatives of management and labour.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with other departments on article 140 of the treaty establishing the European Community, as amended by the treaty of Amsterdam; what reservations were expressed; what study is currently being undertaken on projects to be undertaken under this article; and if he will make a statement. [14309]

Mr. Doug Henderson: All Government Departments with an interest were involved in preparing our negotiating position for Amsterdam and were content that we should agree article 140 (ex article 118c). Article 140 is not yet in force and no projects under it are planned.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what cost-benefit analysis he has undertaken of programmes planned to be introduced under article 137 of the treaty establishing the European Community, as amended by the Amsterdam treaty. [14313]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Article 137 is not yet in force. But it is likely that measures under discussion under article 2 of the agreement on social policy when the Amsterdam treaty came into force would subsequently come under article 137. The costs and benefits of any such proposals would be assessed in the normal way.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13571]

Mr. Fatchett: Responsibility within this department for millennium compliance rests with myself and Roy Dibble, director general services.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [13568]

Mr. Fatchett: The cost of resolving the computer millennium problems in this Department is estimated at £4,100,000.

(i) expenditure incurred already is £193,000.

Annual planned spends are:

(ii) 1997–98: £750,000

(iii) 1998–99: £1,907,000

(iv) 1999–2000: £1,250,000

These figures could be reduced by up to £1,050,000 if no slippage occurs in existing strategic Information Systems infrastructure replacement plans.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13569]

Mr. Fatchett: We expect to achieve millennium compliance by the year 2000. Provision has been made for £2,857,000 for resolution of millennium problems within this Department. There is an additional contingency provision of £1,050,000 to cover the costs of remedial action to existing systems should the planned replacement of strategic systems incur any slippage. Both these sums will be met from the existing PES provision.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if he will make a statement. [13567]

Mr. Fatchett: The costed action plans will be analysed by the Central Information Technology Unit (CITU) and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) and the conclusions reported to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who will then inform Parliament. The plans will be exempted from disclosure under the open government code of practice on access to Government information, which permits non-disclosure prior to an announcement. However, once the announcement has been made the plans will be available to the public. Information systems department submitted this Department's plans to CCTA on 17 October 1997.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if he will make a statement. [13570]

Mr. Fatchett: We completed an initial scoping study in June 1996, followed by a detailed study of the problem and its likely impact on this Department's core IT systems in August 1996. Since then analysis and remedial work on individual systems is being carried out in priority order on those systems for which millennium-compliant replacement is not already planned.

European Movement

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total of public funds given to the European Movement in the most recent annual period for which figures are available; and what record is kept of payments to this organisation by the EU. [14213]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No Government funding has been made available to the European Movement in the current financial year. The European Commission does not publish a list of grants made to organisations providing information about Europe.

Bull Fighting

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to meet representatives from the Spanish Government to encourage a ban on bull fighting; and if he will make a statement. [13685]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are no plans to do so. We are committed to higher standards of animal welfare and will continue to work to achieve improved welfare protection at the EU level.

Australia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Government of Australia concerning proposed changes in aboriginal land title. [13994]

Mr. Fatchett: None.

India

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received urging him to apologise to the Indian people for the Amritsar massacre of 1918; and if he will make a statement. [13985]

Mr. Fatchett: There were a number of representations over the 1919 massacre, whether addressed to the Queen or Her Majesty's Government, in advance of Her Majesty's successful visit to Amritsar where the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh laid wreaths at Jallianwala Bagh.

France

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting between his Department and the French Minister for European Affairs on 16 September. [14269]

Mr. Doug Henderson: On 16 September I met Pierre Moscovici, French Minister for European Affairs, during his visit to London. We discussed a range of European issues, including employment and enlargement in particular. I outlined our approach to the Employment Agenda and in particular the need to address the real problems of competitiveness and employability facing workers in European countries and to make this agenda attractive to citizens. We discussed preparations for the British-French Summit and Luxembourg Special European Council, both of which focus on employment policies. British and French views on enlargement and handling the European conference are similar. I stressed the importance of related issues such as reform of the common agricultural policy. I also raised the urgent need for a solution to the problem of illegal immigrants arriving via Eurostar.

Western Sahara

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made at the United Nations concerning the proposed referendum on the future of the Western Sahara. [13997]

Mr. Fatchett: We have not made any representations at the United Nations concerning the proposed referendum in Western Sahara.

As a permanent member of the Security Council, and a member of the Friends of Western Sahara Group at the United Nations, we are directly involved with the international efforts to secure a lasting solution to the dispute over Western Sahara led by Mr. Baker. We have assisted, and will continue to support, the UN Secretary General and his Personal Envoy.

Kenya

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has held with the Government of Kenya concerning human rights abuses; and if he will make a statement. [13986]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. McDonnell) on 29 October, Official Report, column 824.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Improvement Grants

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications have been made to each regional division of the Housing Executive for each type of improvement grant; if she will indicate the length of time taken to process a grant application; and how long an applicant has to wait within each division for an inspection of property from the time of submission of an application form. [12554]

Mr. Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. The chief executive has advised me that the information requested is as follows, in respect of the period April to September 1997:

Region	Number of preliminary inquiries received[1]	Average time for inspection—weeks[2]	Average time taken to process—weeks[3]
Belfast	1,296	16	29
North East	850	28	29
South East	596	52	25
South	616	79	31
West	1,062	72	32

[1] The grants scheme requires the completion of a preliminary inquiry form. This is not an application, but is the "trigger" for an inspection of a property. Figures are not held by grant type.

[2] These figures represent the average time lapse between receipt of a preliminary enquiry and the date of inspection and only relate to the main "improvement" (i.e. renovation and replacement grants).

[3] These figures represent the average time lapse between the date of inspection and the date of approval for a full application for renovation or replacement grant.

The executive regularly reviews performance standards across its regions and has allocated additional resources to those regions where inspection times are particularly lengthy. Present performance is influenced by the backlog of applications which exists due to unprecedented demand for grants. It is anticipated that performance standards will improve as the benefit of additional resources takes effect. In addition, performance on renovation and replacement grants has been severely effected by the diversion of financial and personnel resources to the administration of repairs grants. These grants are mandatory, on foot of public health notices issued by local councils. Recent years have seen an unprecedented demand for this grant. Very recent legislative changes have led to a significant reduction in repair grant applications. There are already signs of small improvements in performance on other grants as the impact of this reduction takes effect.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if she will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if she expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000; [13619]

(2) what is her latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which she is responsible; if she will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–00; and if she will make a statement; [13618]

(3) when her Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which she is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if she will make a statement; [13620]

(4) if she will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in her Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which she is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if she will make a statement; [13617]

(5) which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in her Department and its associated public bodies. [13621]

Mr. Murphy: The cost of preventative and remedial action on Year 2000 will be met from existing PES provision. Action is planned to be completed before the year 2000.

The Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments had completed their system audits by early summer 1997 and are working to a local target date for submission of detail costed plans to the department of finance and personnel of 1 December 1997. Until these plans have been completed and collated it will not be possible to provide estimates of the costs likely to be involved.

Following analysis of the plans, Parliament will be informed of the outcome. The plans will be exempted from disclosure under the open government code of practice on access to Government information, which permits non-disclosure prior to an announcement. However, once the announcement has been made the plans will be available to the public.

The Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Departments, their agencies and other public bodies are responsible for ensuring millennium compliance for their own systems. The role of the department of finance and personnel is to provide advice and guidance under my direction. In this I am supported by the head of central IT unit within my Department.

HEALTH

Beta Interferon

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of prescribing beta interferon in each year since 1995 for each health authority. [13475]

Mr. Milburn: The available information is shown in the table. Comparable information for the complete 1997 year is not yet available. In order not to disclose information that may relate to an individual patient, information is only provided where 50 items or more have been dispensed. In no health authority in 1995 were 50 or more items dispensed.

The cost of prescribing beta interferon in hospitals is not available.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints his Department has received concerning the prescribing of beta interferon in each year since 1995. [13473]

Mr. Milburn: The Department of Health has received a number of representations about the prescribing of beta interferon, by letter and telephone. However, a central record of all such representations is not available.

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of beta interferon to the NHS in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [13808]

Mr. Milburn: The available information is shown in the table. Comparable information for the complete 1997 year is not yet available.

Roads (A12–A134 Junction)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost, including consultancy fees, of preparing plans for a proposed junction between the A12 and A134. [13306]

Mr. Milburn: The junction onto the A12 is part of a phased development for a new major road in North Colchester. Costs for producing the master plan for the road have been borne by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and the local authority for the area. Generally the costs of preparing the design for the junction itself has been the responsibility of the local authority. Information relating to the precise costs should be sought from the local authority.

Health Service Management Savings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of additional patients the NHS will be able to treat due to management savings between 1 October 1997 and 31 March 1998. [13323]

Mr. Milburn: We set targets to reduce National Health Service management costs in 1997–98 by £100 million. Many of the savings achieved will already have been re-invested locally in direct patient care services. In addition, we have directly invested £10 million of the savings from deferring the 8th wave of general practitioner fundholders in improving breast cancer services, so that all women have speedy access to high quality diagnosis and treatment. We have also invested a further £5 million in strengthening paediatric intensive care services in readiness for the winter. It is estimated that at the start of this financial year health authorities were planning to purchase an additional 66,000 elective episodes—cases treated from waiting lists—in 1997–98 when compared with 1996–97.

Public Health Laboratory Service, Colindale

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement consequent on the recent visit of the Minister for Public Health to the public health laboratory service, Colindale. [13121]

Ms Jowell: I am pleased to note that my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) also visited the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) at their headquarters in Colindale, and trust that he was as impressed as I was by my visit in June. The PHLS has provided microbiological and epidemiological services for fifty years and plays a key role in protecting the population from communicable disease threats. We expect this key role to continue to be central to the Government's emphasis on public health.

Emergency and Elective Treatments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) emergency patients the NHS plans to receive and (b) elective finished consultant episodes the NHS plans to complete between October 1997 and 31 March 1998. [13321]

Mr. Milburn: Plans are only collected on an annual basis. The table gives the 1997–98 plans for elective finished consultant episodes (FCEs) and non-elective finished consultant episodes and first consultant episodes. Non-elective first finished consultant episodes have been collected for the first time this year as a measure of the number of non-elective hospital spells.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of the total financial surpluses held by general practitioner fundholders on 1 April 1997. [13175]

Mr. Milburn: Information on the balance of general practitioner fundholder savings on 1 April 1997 is not yet available. I therefore refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 26 June 1997 at column 620.

Health Authority Budgets

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the likely pressures on health authority budgets arising from the High Court ruling in R v. North Derbyshire health authority ex parte Fisher. [13474]

Mr. Milburn: We do not expect the ruling in the recent judicial review to have any impact on health authority budgets. The ruling requires health authorities, in deciding how best to allocate their available resources to meet the health needs of their population, to have regard to Departmental guidance. It does not require them to give any particular degree of priority to any particular treatment.

Crime Victims (Guidance)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue guidance to social services and NHS staff on procedures they should adopt in relation to the advice and support they should offer to people with learning difficulties within their care who have been a victim of a crime. [13383]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to do so at present. However, we will be considering what, if any, guidance should be issued in the light of a substantial programme of projects the Department of Health has funded on the issue of abuse of people with learning disabilities, a forthcoming consultation seminar on abuse of vulnerable adults in residential services and the work of the Home Office's inter-departmental group on vulnerable and intimidated witnesses. The group is seeking to identify measures that will help vulnerable people including people with learning disabilities who come in contact with the criminal justice system as a result of being a victim of, or a witness to, a crime.

Dental Services

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adults and children in Great Britain were registered with a dentist on 30 September. [13329]

Mr. Milburn: In England and Wales 20,558,282 adults and 7,804,254 child patients were registered with a General Dental Service dentist on 30 September 1997.

For Scotland the latest available data are for 1 September 1997 when 2,098,734 adults and 754,012 child patients were registered.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has funded into chronic fatigue syndrome; what plans he has to commission further research; and what steps have been taken to inform doctors of the results of such research. [13919]

Mr. Boateng: The main agency through which the Government supports medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council. The MRC is an independent body which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology, which is part of the Department of Trade and Industry. The Council currently supports one project grant in the area of Chronic Fatigue Syndrome. This is being undertaken by Dr. R. K. Morriss at the University of Manchester and is entitled "The role of noradrenaline in the neuropsychological pathogenesis of the chronic fatigue syndrome". The total amount awarded is £37,000. The Council is always willing to consider new ideas for research and will consider applications on their scientific merits.

The Department of Health has also funded a research project through the National Health Service Research and Development programme called "Should GPs manage chronic fatigue syndrome? A controlled trial", the report of which is expected shortly. Comprehensive information is not available centrally on all expenditure in the NHS on research into chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the present research projects funded by the Government into the causes and effects of ME, indicating the Government's research objectives in this area. [13965]

Mr. Boateng: The main agency through which the Government supports medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council. The MRC is an independent body which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology, which is part of the Department of Trade and Industry. The Council currently supports one project grant in the area of Chronic Fatigue Syndrome. This is being undertaken by Dr. R. K. Morriss at the University of Manchester and is entitled "The role of noradrenaline in the neuropsychological pathogenesis of the chronic fatigue syndrome".

The Department of Health is also funding a research project through the National Health Service Research and Development programme called "Should GPs manage chronic fatigue syndrome? A controlled trial", the report of which is expected shortly. Comprehensive information is not available centrally on all the activity in the NHS on research into chronic fatigue syndrome/Myalgic Encephalomyelitis.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the sixth annual report of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority to be published; and if he will announce changes in the membership of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. [14542]

Ms Jowell: We have received the report and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of section 7(3) of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

I am pleased to announce the following appointments made on behalf of the United Kingdom Health Ministers:

Mrs. Ruth Deech, Principal of St Anne's College, Oxford, re-appointed as Chairman until 6 November 2000.

Mrs. Jane Denton, Nursing Director of the Multiple Births Foundation and currently a member of the HFEA, appointed as Deputy Chairman until 27 October 1998, when her existing term of membership ends.

Professor Allan Templeton, Department of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, University of Aberdeen, re-appointed as a member until 6 November 2000.

Professor Andrew Grubb, Professor of Health Care Law, King's College, London, appointed as a member until 6 November 2000.

I am very grateful to Lady Brittan, CBE, Mrs Angela Mays and the right Rev. Richard Holloway who are retiring on 6 November having served with the Authority since its inception in 1990. I also wish to thank Professor Rory Nicol who has asked to leave the Authority on 6 November.

The new appointments and re-appointments have been made in accordance with guidance issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Three vacancies remain, about which we shall make an announcement in due course.

Multiple Sclerosis

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure uniformity of treatment for multiple sclerosis sufferers across the United Kingdom. [13785]

Mr. Boateng: We are keen to ensure a greater degree of equity in the availability of treatment for people with multiple sclerosis, wherever they may live. Existing guidance requires all health authorities to develop policies which allow the prescribing of beta interferon, in relation to alternative uses of available resources, in suitable cases.

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients suffering from multiple sclerosis were offered beta interferon by each heath authority in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [13807]

Mr. Milburn: We do not know how many patients were offered beta-interferon, but the number of prescription items for beta-interferon products dispensed in the community in England is shown in the table. In order not to disclose information that may relate to an individual patient, information is only provided where 50 items or more have been dispensed. In no health authority in 1995 were 50 or more items dispensed.

Comparable data for 1997 are not yet available.

The cost of prescribing beta interferon in hospitals is not available.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the total real level of his Department's budget, in 1995–96 prices, in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; and if he will estimate what such figures were for (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99 following the November 1996 Budget on the basis of the estimates of the GDP deflator contained in the Budget. [13232]

Mr. Milburn: The figures requested for the Department's spending plans within the Control Total are as follows: (a) £33,306 million, (b) £33,516 million, (1) £33,422 million and (2) £33,174 million. (Source: Treasury).

Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) NHS trusts and (c) other health bodies for which he has responsibility, on tax advice; and if he will make a statement. [13236]

Mr. Milburn: For the expenditure on tax advice by the Department, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health has given him today. National Health Service trusts and other health bodies provide analyses of their expenditure to the department but expenditure on tax advice is not shown separately.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on the purchase of tax avoidance advice by the NHS; what directives he has issued on the purchase of tax avoidance advice by the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [13237]

Mr. Milburn: Last month we agreed that an Executive Letter should be sent to all National Health Service bodies setting out the Government's policy on this. This will be issued shortly.

Health Trusts (Deficits)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) actual deficits (b) projected deficits of each health trust in England as a percentage of their budget for the last three years. [14272]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested has been placed in the Library. Percentages have been given with respect to the income or turnover of each trust.

Health Authorities (Deficits)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) actual deficits and (b) projected deficits of each health authority in England as a percentage of their budget for their last three years. [14276]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested has been placed in the Library. Percentages have been given with respect to the income or turnover of each health authority.

Private Medicine (Tax Reliefs)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the effects on demand for NHS treatment of the decision to abolish the tax relief on private medical insurance payments; and if he will make a statement. [13239]

Mr. Milburn: We have made available substantial additional resources to the National Health Service, both this year and next, which dwarf any additional demand created by the abolition of tax relief on private medical insurance premiums.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if he will make a statement. [13602]

Ms Jowell: Year 2000 plans covering the Department of Health were sent to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) in October 1997. The plans and supporting documentation will be analyzed by the Central Information Technology Unit and the CCTA and their conclusions reported to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who will then inform Parliament of his findings. The plans are exempted from disclosure under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, prior to an announcement.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will give in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [13603]

Ms Jowell: Information on planned expenditure by the Department will be sent to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency as a part of the action plan requested by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and as such will become available once a statement on this activity has been made to Parliament.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13606]

Ms Jowell: The Minister responsible for ensuring Year 2000 compliance is my Noble Friend the Minister of State, Baroness Jay and the work programme within the departments is being coordinated by the head of the applications development and support who reports to a senior departmental information system steering committee on the Year 2000 issue.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of the systems; and if he will make a statement. [13605]

Ms Jowell: The Department and its Agencies have completed their millennium computer compliance audits, with the exception of National Health Service Estates who expect completion by 31 January 1998.

For each separate NHS organisation, by 31 December 1998, all critical systems should be ready and fully tested, or detailed plans made for coping with those systems or equipment that cannot be repaired or replaced in time. We will require that any trust or health authority which has not got its systems ready and fully tested should notify the Department by 31 December 1998.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if he expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13604]

Ms Jowell: The Department is committed to resolving any Year 2000 problems on business critical systems by the Central Information Technology Unit recommended deadline. The cost of preventative and remedial action will be met from existing financial provision.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time taken by his Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13951]

Ms. Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wallsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 3 November, Official Report, column 5.

Figures for 1997 are not yet available.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of trends in hospital waiting lists over the next six months; and if he will make a statement. [13233]

Mr. Milburn: Our predecessors left the National Health Service with rising waiting times and a record number of patients waiting to be treated. It will take time to turn around the situation we inherited. The £269 million redirected to the NHS in England for 1997–98 will help health authorities and trusts to begin to restrain the growth in waiting lists and times as will the £1 billion increase for next year announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in July.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken on the relationship between NHS funding and hospital waiting lists; if he will publish such research; and if he will make a statement. [13235]

Mr. Milburn: Waiting lists are influenced by a number of factors, of which funding is only one. New treatments are becoming available all the time and new techniques are being introduced which enable people to undergo surgery who previously could not have been treated. We are working with health authorities and trusts to ensure that the best possible use is made of the resources available to them and that more of each pound spent on the National Health Service goes on direct patient care. The £269 million we have re-directed to the NHS in England for 1997–98 and the £1 billion increase for next year announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in July are significant steps towards fulfilling our commitment to shorten waiting lists.

NHS Capacity

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his assessment of the ability of the NHS to deal with seasonal demand pressures this winter. [13238]

Mr. Boateng: We have made clear that the first priority of health authorities and National Health Service trusts, above all other, is to make adequate provision for emergency care. Health authorities, NHS trusts and local authority social services departments around the country are working hard to prepare for this winter. The Government has made available an additional £269 million for the NHS in England in the current year to help in this task. In addition in 1998–99 there will be a 1.9 per cent. real terms increase in general revenue allocations to health authorities, the largest for five years.

Diabetic Pen Needles

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what factors are being considered in determining whether pen needles for insulin dependent diabetics should be available on prescription; [13240]

(2) what representations he has received about pen needles for the use of insulin dependent diabetics; and if he will make a statement. [13242]

Mr. Milburn: We have received representations from the British Diabetic Association and others which we are considering, taking all relevant factors into account.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are her plans for the out-of-hours payment service operated by the Benefits Agency. [14018]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, The Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 3 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the plans for the out-of-hours payment service operated by the Benefits Agency.

In line with the Government's commitment to modernise the Social Security system a consultation exercise between officials from the Benefits Agency (BA) and other Departments on the future of the current Out of Hours Service has recently been undertaken.

As a result of those discussions there are no plans at present to change the way in which the current service is administered. BA offices will therefore continue to provide an Out of Hours Service.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations she has received about the level of the mortgage interest rate paid to those on benefits; and if she will make a statement. [13243]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) on 30 October, Official Report, column 856.

We have received 562 representations from hon. Members, members of the public and national organisations.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the guidelines for the minimum levels of income which absent parents should expect to live on following calculations by the CSA. [13735]

Mr. Keith Bradley: For those in work, child support assessments made under the maintenance formula ensure that an absent parent is generally left with at least 70 per cent. of his net income and at least £30 a week more than he would have if claiming income support. Most absent parents are left with significantly higher amounts, though lower figures may apply where, for example, an interim maintenance assessment has been imposed in an effort to secure the absent parent's co-operation or the absent parent is in arrears with his payments.

Absent parents who receive income support or income-based jobseeker's allowance are generally required to pay a standard weekly amount, currently £5.00, unless for example they are sick or disabled or have a dependent child living with them. This payment recognises that absent parents are important to their children and should normally be expected to contribute to their maintenance.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if travel to work costs are taken into consideration by the CSA in making assessments of payments by an absent parent; and if she will make a statement. [13734]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Travel to work costs are taken into consideration under the standard maintenance formula. Where the straight line distance of journeys from home to work exceeds 150 miles per week an allowance of 10 pence per mile is made for each excess mile.

Parents may apply for a departure from the standard assessment where they face high travel to work costs of more than £15.00 per week. This gives the flexibility to take account of individual circumstances in the minority of cases where the formula assessment does not give a fair result.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in her Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which she is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if she will make a statement. [13612]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The costed action plan produced by the Department of Social Security was submitted to Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) on 30 September 1997. This plan, together with the plans of other Government Departments, will be analysed by Central Information Technology Unit (CITU) and the CCTA and the conclusions reported to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who will then inform Parliament. The plans will be exempted from disclosure under the open government code of practice on access to Government information, which permits non-disclosure prior to an announcement. Once the announcement has been made the plans will be available.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when her Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which she is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if she will make a statement. [13615]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The year 2000 compliance audit of the Department's systems, comprising its agencies and other public bodies, was completed by 31 March 1997.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in her Department and its associated public bodies. [13616]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I have ministerial responsibility for the year 2000 compliance work and Mr. Ian Magee, the chief executive of the Information Technology Services Agency, is the civil servant accountable for this work on behalf of the Department of Social Security, reporting to the departmental board and the permanent secretary.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which she is responsible; if she will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–2000; and if she will make a statement. [13613]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is in the table.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if she expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13614]

Mr. Keith Bradley: This work has been afforded the highest priority across the Department. Business Cases to secure the necessary funds from existing PES provision have been produced and a Corporate Business Case seeking approval to spend will be submitted to HM Treasury in November 1997.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations her Department has received on benefit payments to asylum seekers. [13992]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. George) on 27 October, Official Report, columns 728–29.

Reciprocal Pension Agreements

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to extend reciprocal pension agreements to other countries; and when she expects such arrangements to be made. [13946]

Mr. Denham: The Government has no plans to extend reciprocal pension agreements to other countries.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment her Department is currently undertaking into the lower age limit for mobility allowance; [13241]

(2) what representations she has received regarding the upper and lower age limits for mobility allowance. [13244]

Mr. Denham: There have been 95 representations from hon. Members, members of the public and national organisations, since June 1997, of which 61 related to the rules about the upper age limit for the benefit as a whole.

The comprehensive spending reviews in this Department, which were announced in June, include those benefits paid to sick and disabled people. The reviews will include an examination of the entitlement rules to disability living allowance to ensure that help is provided to those people with greatest needs.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Beard: To ask the Attorney-General what proposals there are to change the 1997–98 cash limit or running cost limit for the work of Her Majesty's Procurator-General and Treasury Solicitor. [14043]

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class VIII, vote 6 will be increased by £433,000 from £7,003,000 to £7,436,000. The running costs limit is also increased by £712,000 from £25,742,000 to £26,454,000. The increases reflect the increased demand for services, machinery of Government changes and a transfer of an end year flexibility amount from the Crown Prosecution Service to take account of the costs of the CPS review falling on the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers. The increase in the cash limit will be charged to the Reserve and will therefore not be an addition to the planned total of public expenditure.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

British Railways Board

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has set the British Railways Board an external finance limit for 1997–98. [14922]

Dr. Strang: I have set the British Railways Board an external finance limit of £69.7 million for 1997–98.

Transport Council

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Transport Council held in Luxembourg on 9 October. [14923]

Dr. Strang: The Transport Council met in Luxembourg on 9 October. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council opened with a session of structured dialogue with Transport Ministers of the applicant central European countries—CECs. A report by the Commission on the recent Pan-European conference in Helsinki was followed by discussion of issues relating to market access. Three areas for future work were identified: the need to strengthen co-operation between the Community and the CECs; developing the mobility of citizens; and the need to take account of all modes of transport in negotiations in market access.

The Council discussed air transport negotiations with the US. The Commission's view was that, although Community discussions with the US on regulatory issues had been useful, further progress would not be made unless market access was brought within the scope of the negotiations. The UK noted that success in its current bilateral negotiations with the US would bring benefits for passengers from the UK and the rest of the EU. The UK and other member states expressed doubts about the Commission's approach. The presidency concluded that there should be further work by the Commission, and a report back to the December Council.

The Council took note of the Commission's progress report on air transport negotiations with the CECs.

The Council debated a draft directive on airport charges. The debate focused on two aspects of the directive: the use of charges for cross-subsidy of smaller regional airports; and the variability of charges to reflect environmental considerations. The Council invited the Committee of Permanent Representatives to continue its examination of the proposal.

The Council reached unanimous political agreement on a directive on access to the occupation of road transport operator. This directive will raise the standards required of lorry, bus and coach operators in the Community.

The Council agreed conclusions urging greater emphasis on the public-private partnerships approach to Trans-European Network projects.

The Commission presented its White Paper on extension of the provisions of working time legislation to excluded sectors, including transport. It was noted that consultation with interested parties was still in progress. The UK, with some other member states, urged a case-by-case approach to the extension to transport, taking account of the needs of each form of transport.

The Commission presented the case for a Community-wide blood alcohol limit of 50 mg per 100 ml. The UK expressed its determination to further reduce alcohol-related roads deaths, and noted that it was important to consider other ways of reducing drink-drive accidents as well.

There was a discussion of weekend lorry bans in member states; the Commission undertook to produce draft legislation on this issue by the end of the year. The Commission also presented its draft regulation extending the Community's competition rules to air services to third countries.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [13257]

Angela Eagle: For the Department and for non-departmental public bodies the information is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. For agencies the figures are: 1995–96 Nil, 1996–97 £16,562 and 1997–98 (spend to date) £3,525.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the policy of his Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if he will make a statement. [13258]

Angela Eagle: One agency of the Department has used tax advisers to enable it to fulfil its statutory tax obligations rather than for tax avoidance purposes.

Roads (Downland Design, Build, Finance and Operate Scheme)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what compensation payments are required to be made, and to whom, as a result of the decision not to proceed in July with the construction of the A27 Polegate bypass and associated works within the Weald and Downland DBFO scheme. [13776]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1997]: We are currently considering whether the four consortia that submitted tenders for the Weald and Downland DBFO project should be compensated for their costs.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the total cost to the Government of compensation in respect of the postponement of the Downland DBFO Scheme. [14204]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are currently considering whether the four consortia who submitted tenders for the Weald and Downland DBFO project should be compensated for their costs.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to change the 1997–98 cash limit and net running cost limit for the Ordnance Survey. [14400]

Mr. Raynsford: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary winter supplementary estimate for Ordnance Survey, the cash limit will be increased by a token of £1,000 from £6,759,000 to £6,760,000 and the net running cost limit increased from £3,025,000 to £3,026,000.

This supplementary estimate reflects an increase in running cost expenditure of £2,001,000 from £73,970,000 offset by an increase in appropriations in aid of £2,000,000 from £78,180,000 to £80,180,000.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change his Department's cash limits and running cost limits for 1997–98. [14401]

Mr. Prescott: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, my Department's cash limits will change as follows:

(i) the cash limit for class V, vote 1—Highways Agency—will be increased by £10,229,000 from £1,562,329,000 to £1,572,558,000. The increase in the cash limit reflects the take-up of £11,979,000 capital end year flexibility amount as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50, offset by an inter-vote transfer from this vote to class V, vote 2 of £1,750,000 for the ongoing motorway tolling project.

(ii) the cash limit for class V, vote 2—Department of Transport: administration and transport services—will be increased by £3,625,000 from £158,075,000 to £161,700,000. The increase results from the take-up of £2,000,000 capital end year flexibility amount as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report columns 245–50 and inter-vote transfers from class V, vote 1 of £1,750,000 and from class V, vote 5 of £85,000 for mobility unit expenditure to be re-classified as running costs, offset by inter-vote transfers from this vote to class V, vote 5 of £60,000 for priority routes in London and to class XIII, vote 2 of £150,000 for the Edinburgh City Car Club research project. Running cost provision for this vote increases by £85,000 from £86,436,000 to £86,521,000.

(iii) the cash limit for class V, vote 5—Roads and local transport—will be increased by £1,675,000 from £313,863,000 to £315,538,000. The increase reflects the take up of £2,100,000 structural funds end year flexibility amount as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report columns 245–50 and an inter-vote transfer from class V, vote 2 of £60,000, offset by an inter-vote transfer from this vote to class V, vote 2 of £85,000 and a reduction in the provision for licence fee refunds to goods vehicle and public service vehicle operators and drivers of £400,000.

(iv) the cash limit for class V, vote 7—Passenger rail services—will be reduced by £51,000,000 from £1,516,385,000 to £1,465,385,000. The reduction reflects a £50,000,000 inter-vote transfer from this vote to class V, vote 3 for Metropolitan Railway Passenger Services Grant, and a £1,000,000 reduction in respect of reduced expenditure on consultants.

(v) the DoT/LACAP (Local Authority Capital) non-voted cash limit will be increased by £7,150,000 from £349,193,000 to £356,343,000, to fund works associated with the rebuilding of Manchester city centre comprising of improvements to the Inner Relief Road, the development of a bus strategy and traffic management scheme and improved routes for pedestrians. The increase of £7,150,000 will be met by a call on the Reserve.

As a consequence of the changes in (ii) above the gross running costs limit operating on class V, votes 1, 2, 4 and 6 will be increased by £85,000 from £373,274,000 to £373,359,000.

(vi) the cash limit for class VI, vote 1—housing and construction, England—covering sections A, D to G, I, J and L of that vote, will be decreased by £3,325.000 from £599,708,000 to £596,383,000. An increase in the cash limit of £220,000 is offset by a decrease of £3,545,000. The increase is to meet residual additional administration costs the Housing Corporation is expected to incur in respect of the loan portfolio sale, funded from sale receipts. The decrease results principally from a reduction of £2,935,000 in homelessness grants current expenditure provision to fund an increase in rough sleepers initiative capital allocations through the Housing Corporation, which falls outside the cash limit. Of the remaining reductions, Estates Renewal Challenge Fund provision will be reduced by £500,000 to support registered social landlords' housing costs arising from the need to house people displaced from Montserrat as a result of volcanic activity on the island, and a reduction of £110,000 results from a reclassification of extra receipts recovered from homelessness grants, so that voted provision takes account of those receipts and is adjusted accordingly. The DETR/HC (Housing Corporation) cash limit will consequently be increased by £3,435,000 from £673,050,000 to £676,485,000.

(vii) a new DETR/CRI (Capital Receipts Initiative) cash limit will be introduced, subject to the passage of legislation, to cover the Government's initiative to release additional resources to support local authority spending on housing and housing associated regeneration. The limit on expenditure is set initially at £174,270,000.

(viii) the cash limit for class VI, vote 2—regeneration and countryside and wildlife, England—will be increased by £36,116,000 from £1,480,168,000 to £1,516,284,000. An increase is required of £14,000,000 for the Urban Regeneration Agency (English Partnerships) to continue with works at Greenwich for the Millennium Exhibition and £7,230,000 for support for the regeneration of Manchester city centre; £8,000,000 for payments to be made for ERDF projects in advance of grant; £2,491,000 for the Teesside Development Corporation to meet a deficit as a result of judicial review; and £4,395,000 on three capital projects which had slipped from previous years. The increase will be met by a call on the Reserve of £17,991,000, the use of £10,125,000 end year flexibility amount as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report columns 245–50, offset in part by the surrender of £4,000,000 of receipts to the Exchequer and a transfer of £8,000,000 from the DOE/ERDF non-voted cash limit.

(ix) the DETR/ERDF (European Regional Development Fund) non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £8,000,000 from £146,332,000 to £138,332,000. This reflects gross payments to be made for ERDF projects in advance of European Community receipts. As a consequence of (viii) above, there will be increases to external financing limits for the Urban Development Corporations of £1,427,000 from £199,784,000 to £201,211,00; for the Urban Regeneration Agency (English Partnerships) of £46,000,000 from £204,779,000 to £250,779,000 and for the Housing Action Trusts of £512,000 from £88,688,000 to £89,200.00.

(x) the cash limit for class VI, vote 4—local government and planning, England—covering sections A to F of that vote, will be reduced by £321,000 from £30,987,957,000 to £30,987,636,000. This reflects savings on payments to meet the expenses of valuation tribunals in Section A (Valuation services), on grant in aid to the Local Government Residuary Body in Section B (Reorganisation of local government) and on the European Union Spatial Planning Initiative in Section D (Planning and minerals research). The saving will be used within vote 4, to cover residual payments of council tax transitional reduction grant in Section H (Council tax transitional reduction grant) and of special grant to authorities affected by the terrorist bombings of Docklands and Manchester and emergency financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme in section 1 (Other grants), which are outside the cash limit on the vote.

The overall increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Local Government Finance

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money has been given to Derbyshire county council and Derby city council in revenue support grant from central Government for 1997–98 [13753]

Mr. Raynsford: Derbyshire county council received £166.734 million and Derby city council received £84.507 million revenue support grant for 1997–98.

Rent Officer Service

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what decision has been made in relation to the future of the rent officer service; and how many responses were received during the consultation period. [13479]

Ms Armstrong: I announced on 7 August that I had concluded that there was a strong case for the creation of a Next Steps Agency for the Rent Officer Service in England. I said then that before taking a final decision I would be consulting interested parties, including the Local Government Association, the trades unions representing rent officers and their support staff, and other interested parties. That consultation is now complete, and I am grateful for the 63 responses I received from individuals and organisations. I am placing a summary of these in the Library.

There is general agreement that the current arrangements are unsatisfactory, but views differ on the solution. Many respondents favoured the Agency proposal, but support was also expressed for various alternative proposals. I have given very careful consideration to all the views which have been submitted, but have concluded that none of the alternative suggestions would tackle satisfactorily the inherent problems of the Service, which are caused by the unclear pattern of accountability and local inconsistencies of approach. I have therefore decided to proceed with the establishment of a Next Steps Agency for the Rent Officer Service in England.

My Department will now go ahead, in consultation with interested parties, to make preparations for establishing the Agency. It will be necessary to ensure that the implementation costs can be contained within the available public expenditure provision. For this reason, and because of the amount of detailed planning yet to be done, I cannot yet say when the Agency will become operational, but it will be as soon as practicable.

Waste Dumping at Sea

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the time scale for ending the dumping of wastes at sea. [13025]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom is a contracting party to the Oslo convention for the prevention of marine pollution by dumping from ships and aircraft and its successor, the convention for the protection of the marine environment of the north-east Atlantic (the OSPAR convention) which is expected to come into force shortly. Under the OSPAR convention only the following may be considered for dumping.

dredged material

inert materials of natural origin, that is solid, chemically unprocessed geological material the chemical constituents of which are unlikely to be released into the marine environment;

sewage sludge until 31 December 1998;

fish waste from industrial fish processing operations; and vessels and aircraft until, at the latest, 31 December 2004.

disused offshore installations and offshore pipelines.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Passports

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many passports were issued by the British embassy in Dublin in each of the last five years and how many were refused in each of those years specifying the most frequent reason for refusal. [13020]

Mr. Fatchett: The information is as follows:

	Passports issued	Ineligible applications/refusals
1993	4,835	12
1994	6,122	24
1995	5,236	17
1996	5,406	20
1997	5,068	11
Total to date	26,667	84

These figures do not include extensions, child additions or amendments. Entitlement to British passports is a matter of law. Passports are refused when the applicant is unable to prove identity or his or her claim to British nationality.

Belarus

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made through diplomatic channels to the State of Belarus about the suspension of parliamentary democracy within that country. [13101]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We regularly make clear to the Belarus authorities our concerns over the constitutional and human rights situation in Belarus. Our ambassador in Minsk reiterated these concerns to Foreign Minister Antanovich at a meeting in September and officials from this Department made similar points to Deputy Foreign Minister Martynov in London in September.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent contacts there have been between Her Majesty's Government and the state of Belarus. [13100]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Following the disputed constitutional referendum of November 1996, the EU General Affairs Council adopted Conclusions in February 1997, in accordance with which we have had no Ministerial contacts with Belarus. Officials from this Department made clear to Deputy Foreign Minister Martynov in London in September our concerns about the constitutional and human rights situation.

Commonwealth Summit (Bananas and Sugar)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with representatives of Commonwealth Governments at Edinburgh concerning (a) the World Trade Organisation judgment on trade in bananas and (b) the consequential effects of such judgment on the Lomé agreement, with particular reference to its protocol concerning sugar. [13390]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met representatives of Caribbean Commonwealth Governments and discussed, among other things, their concerns about the implications of the World Trade Organisation ruling. He made clear that the UK would work for a new EC banana regime which was consistent with WTO rules and which took account of our obligations under the Lomé convention. He did not discuss the potential effects of the ruling on other preferential effects of the ruling on other preferential trading arrangements provided for under the Lomé convention. The Edinburgh economic declaration notes our support for the legitimate interests of the African Caribbean and Pacific banana producers and our resolve to work for a successor arrangement to the Lomé convention which gives the ACP adequate transitional arrangements.

European Treaties

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with which person or body articles of ratification of the treaty of Amsterdam will be deposited; if there is any time limit on such action; and what obligations will be placed on any member state, other than those entered into in the current treaties, if they are unable to deposit such articles or other necessary documents. [13050]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 30 October 1997]: Instruments of ratification of the Treaty of Amsterdam will be deposited with the Italian Government. No time limit has been set for ratifying the treaty. The treaty will only enter into force after all member states have ratified it and it will therefore impose no obligations on a state which does not ratify it.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish prior to consideration of the Bill enabling Her Majesty's Government to ratify the treaty of Amsterdam a consolidated version of the principal treaties of the European Community and Union combining the content of the treaties of Maastricht and Amsterdam. [13054]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 30 October 1997]: The intergovernmental conference agreed to attach to the Final Act, for illustrative purposes, the texts of the treaty on European Union and the treaty establishing the European Community as they result from the amendments made by the Treaty of Amsterdam. These texts are set out in Cm 3780. They do not form part of the treaty of Amsterdam and do not themselves require ratification.

Immigration Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters from hon. members have been received since May relating to immigration matters; how many were received in the same period last year; what percentage of replies to hon. Members are signed by a Minister; and what are the factors which determine that such replies are signed in this way. [13199]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 30 October 1997]: Between 1 May and 31 October 5,812 letters were received from Members; 4,321 were received in the same period last year; around 11 per cent. are signed by a Minister. There are no set factors determining which letters are signed by a Minister; each case is considered individually.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes to make in his Department's cash limits and running cost limits for 1997–98. [14286]

Mr. Fatchett: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates the following changes will be made:

The cash limit for class II, vote 1 (Overseas Representation) will be increased by £9,050,000 from £619,826,000 to £628,876,000. The increase is required to cover the costs of major conferences, specifically the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting, the EU Presidency and the Asia Europe Meeting, which total £9,000,000. There is also a transfer in of £50,000 from the Home Office for a contribution towards the fight against international drug trafficking.

The gross running costs limit on class II, vote 1 will be increased by £9,050,000 from £525,763,000 to £534,813,000.

The cash limit for class II, vote 2 (Other External Relations) will be increased by £12,600,000 from £217,215,000 to £229,815,000. The increase is required to cover UK contributions to certain OSCE, United Nations and WEU Missions of £12,000,000 and also for a transfer of £600,000 from the Home Office towards certain Overseas Drugs Assistance Programmes.

In addition, the cash limit for class II, vote 3 (BBC World Service) will be reduced by £2,558,000 from £169,906,000 to £167,348,000. This reduction takes account of transfers to the Ministry of Defence of £3,444,000 and to the Cabinet Office of £327,000 to reflect the movement of the BBC World Service Monitoring Service to subscription-based funding. This is partially offset by the take-up of a capital end-year flexibility amount of £1,213,000 as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July, Official Report, columns 245–50.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve, and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Human Rights

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations concerning abuses of human rights Her Majesty's Government have made to the Czech and Slovak Republics. [13491]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 3 November 1997]: We are aware of reports of incidents of discrimination against members of the Roma community in the Czech Republic and Slovakia. We have been in contact with the Governments of the two countries, and do not consider these to be institutionalised abuses of human rights.

Burma

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards democracy in Burma since 1 May. [14072]

Mr. Fatchett: The State Law and Order Restoration Council (SLORC) continue to repress pro-democracy and ethnic groups, and remain unwilling to enter into substantive dialogue with Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders. Ministers have made several statements since 1 May condemning the SLORC's policies, and have supported the introduction of tougher measures against the SLORC at both the national and EU level.

Australia

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his Australian counterpart concerning the arrangements being made for testing parliamentary and public opinion in Australia on whether that country should become a republic; and if he will make a statement. [14395]

Mr. Fatchett: None.

Antarctic

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the Government of Japan concerning ratification of the Antarctic treaty. [14218]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Officials have discussed the ratification of the Environmental Protocol to the Antarctic Treaty with their Japanese counterparts several times in the past few months and have used these occasions to encourage Japan to ratify it at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the signatory nations to the Antarctic Environmental protocol; and when he expects to be able to make an announcement on the siting of the secretariat. [14219]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There have been no further discussions since the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting (ATCM) in New Zealand in May this year when the Consultative Parties were unable to reach consensus on the location of the Secretariat. The next ATCM will be in May 1998.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Girocheques (Reissues)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the percentage increase in 1996 of reissues of girocheques (a) in total and (b) by social security office that involved losses to her Department; and if she will make a statement. [13021]

Mr. Worthington: Responsibility for the subject has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Chris Thompson. I have asked him to arrange for a response to be given.

Letter from Chris Thompson to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 31 October 1997:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question on the percentage increase, in 1996, of re-issues of girocheques.

The percentage increase in 1996–97 of re-issued girocheques to benefit customers in Northern Ireland which led to losses to the Department of Health and Social Services was 16.9 per cent. This percentage excludes 234 re-issues in 1995–96 and 982 re-issues in 1996–97 which are still under investigation. The percentage change for each Social Security Office is given in the attached table.

The main reason for the increase between 1995–96 and 1996–97 is that from November 1995, procedures in the Social Security Agency were brought in line with those of the Benefits Agency in Great Britain to reflect the legal position.

Case law in Great Britain on the treatment of claims and payments places the burden of proof on the Department to show that the customer has received benefit from an instrument of payment which has been lost or stolen. This means that the Social Security Agency cannot delay in making a replacement payment, for example, to await the trace encashment of the original girocheque. Within this procedure, all reasonable practical precautions are of course taken before a payment is reissued.

The Agency attaches much importance to the prevention of fraud and the use of taxpayers' money and, taking account of the concern expressed, is reviewing its existing procedures.

I hope this explains the position for you but I would be happy to provide any further information you require.

Southern Health and Social Services Council

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which members of the Southern health and social services council belong to (a) the SDLP, and (b) the Ulster Unionist party; how many of these appointments were recommended by representatives of the Irish Government; and if she will make a statement. [13012]

Mr. Worthington: Monitoring information on the political activity of appointees to the Health and Social Services Councils has only been collected since July 1996. Of the 10 places, out of a full membership of 24, reserved on the Southern Health and Social Services Council for District Council nominees, five are held by SDLP members and five are held by members of the Ulster Unionist Party. The monitoring information held by the Department indicates that no political activity has been undertaken by the other members in the last five years.

None of the members of the Southern Council were recommended for consideration for appointment by representatives of the Irish Government.

Paramilitary Beatings

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list all recorded instances of paramilitary beatings in the period since the Provisional IRA ceasefire of July 1997, indicating in each instance whether the event was carried out by loyalist or republican groups and giving the equivalent figures of the preceding six months. [13856]

Mr. Ingram: The table illustrates the number of paramilitary style assaults and paramilitary shootings attributed to Loyalist and Republican groups since the Provisional IRA ceasefire on 20 July 1997 and equivalent figures for the previous six months.

Forest Service

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for the future organisation of the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture. [14838]

Majorie Mowlam: As my colleague the Minister with responsibility for this matter, Lord Dubs, announced in another place on 16 October in reply to a question from baroness Nicol, Official Report, House of Lords, column 200, following consideration of a Prior Options Study, which was announced to Parliament on 7 March 1995, the Government have decided that the Forest Service should become a Next Steps Agency and that preparations should proceed with a view to agentisation with effect from 1 April 1998.

The Forest Service is responsible for the implementation of Government forestry policy within Northern Ireland and performs broadly the same functions as the Forestry Commission in Great Britain. Agency status will give the service more flexibility in its commercial operations and in the delivery of Government forestry objectives.

Health Authority Budgets

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the (a) actual deficit and (b) projected deficit of each health authority as a percentage of its budget for the last three years. [14464]

Mr. Worthington: The following schedule gives (a) the actual deficit for each of the HSS Health Boards in Northern Ireland for the years 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 as per the audited accounts and (b) the deficit expressed as a percentage of each board's budget figure.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the (a) actual deficits and (b) projected deficits of each health trust as a percentage of their budgets for the last three years. [14271]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The schedule gives (a) the actual deficit for each of the HSS trusts in Northern Ireland for the years 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 as per the audited accounts and (b) the deficit figure expressed as a percentage of each trust's total income.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Dispute Resolution

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how he intends to promote greater use of alternative dispute resolution in place of civil litigation. [13312]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has recently approved pilot schemes for alternative dispute resolution at Bristol county court and in the Court of Appeal. A mediation pilot scheme has been running at Central London county court since May 1996. Before deciding the next steps, the Lord Chancellor will consider the outcome of research on the Central London scheme. The initial report is expected early next year.

EU Regulations

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to ensure the up-to-date publication of all amendments to the current United Kingdom law occasioned by European Union regulations. [13387]

Mr. Hoon: Queen's Printer's copies of all newly enacted Acts of Parliament and of Statutory Instruments implementing amendments to current United Kingdom law occasioned by European Union regulations are published promptly by The Stationery Office Limited. The text is also made available on the Internet. The explanatory note at the end of each Statutory Instrument which implements a European Union obligation will identify and cite the relevant European Union instrument.

The Lord Chancellor's Department is setting up a statute law database to ensure publication of up to date amended text of United Kingdom Public General Acts of Parliament. Amendments made to those Acts by United Kingdom legislation in implementation of European Union obligations will be duly incorporated. It is not at present intended that the statute law database should include amended text of Statutory Instruments.

Living Wills

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to amend the law relating to living wills; and if he will make a statement. [13146]

Mr. Hoon: The Law Commission report on mental incapacity published in 1995 includes recommendations relating to advance statements (sometimes referred to as living wills). As I indicated in my written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Hope) on 28 October, Official Report, column 787, the Government do not consider that it would be appropriate to legislate on the basis of these recommendations without fresh public consultation. It is hoped that a consultation paper will be issued by the end of the year.

Magistrates Courts Committees (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from magistrates in West Yorkshire over the work of the joint magistrates committees; and if he will make a statement. [13398]

Mr. Hoon: I have received a letter from one magistrate from West Riding Metropolitan Magistrates Courts Committee which questioned the necessity for a magistrates courts committee for the area. I have also received a letter from the chairman of the Wakefield bench of that MCC concerning the committee's proposals to reallocate duties from the deputy clerks to an increased number of justices clerks and to remove the post of deputy clerk.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list his Department's priorities in relation to tourism during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Union. [12972]

Mr. Tom Clarke: We believe that the main aim for the Tourism Unit in the Commission should be to ensure that, across the range of Commission responsibilities, account should be taken of the impact on tourism of decisions and actions, and that the employment and other opportunities represented by tourism should be recognised.

We shall be announcing specific events for the British presidency relating to the Department's various responsibilities in due course.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Miller: to ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what changes he proposes to make to his Department's cash limit and running cost limit for 1997–98. [14011]

Mr. Chris Smith: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class X, vote 1 will be increased by £6,100,000 from £867,853,000 to £873,953,000 and the running costs limit reduced by £746,000 from £30,091,000 to £29,345,000. This is to provide for an increase in provision for the British Library St. Pancras project; to provide for additional maintenance expenditure for the British Library; an increase in provision for the refurbishment of Somerset House for the housing of the Gilbert Collection; transfers from the Department of Trade and Industry (class IV, vote 1) for Sector Challenge funding of tourist and media projects and for sponsorship of the music industry; and a transfer to the Home Office (class VII, vote 1) for voluntary services.

The increases will be offset by transfers, savings and charges to the Reserve, and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

PRIME MINISTER

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to change the Cabinet Office: Security and Intelligence Services cash limits for 1997–98. [14278]

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 2 will be increased by £5,606,000 from £713,307,000 to £718,913,000. The running costs cash limit will be increased by £5,606,000 from £362,082,000 to £367,688,000. The increase in running costs is needed to take on board transfers from OPS to the FCO and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals there are to change the 1997–98 cash limit or running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: other services vote. [14308]

The Prime Minister: The cash limit for Cabinet Office: other services (class XVIII, vote 1) will be increased by £1,291,000 from £36,153,000 to £37,444,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £1,291,000 from £42,803,000 to £44,094,000.

This is to reflect a transfer of £168,000 from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (class II, vote 3) for the BBC World Service Monitoring Service, which is moving to subscription based funding. The vote is also eligible for a running costs cash limit increase of £1,123,000 in respect of end year flexibility arrangements, as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–250.

The increase will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve, and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers living in the London borough of Barnet have had (a) a final determination of their asylum application made adverse to them and (b) how many of (a) above have been moved into deportation areas and have not yet left the country; and what is the cost to the London borough of Barnet and to central Government of supporting such persons, in total and on average. [13119]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally. Information on where asylum seekers are living is not available centrally: we cannot therefore give any information on asylum seekers in the London borough of Barnet.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many unsuccessful asylum seekers are currently awaiting deportation from England and Wales; [13769]

(2) how many unsuccessful asylum seekers are currently awaiting deportation from Scotland. [13770]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the information is not available separately for England and Wales, or for Scotland.

The available information relates to asylum seekers whose initial decision was a refusal, who have subsequently had a deportation order signed and who have not yet left the United Kingdom. As at 30 September 1997, there were 1,510 such persons. That figure is provisional and excludes persons treated as illegal entrants or subject to port refusal procedures.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for changes to the 1997–98 cash and running costs limits within his responsibilities. [14066]

Mr. Straw: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary token supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class VII, vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) will be reduced by £510,000 from £4,729,171,000 to £4,728,661,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £5,251,000 from £1,887,680,000 to £1,892,931,000.

The changes in the cash limit are the net effect of the following:

A transfer of £490,000 from the non voted cash limit HO/LACAP to fund expenditure on the National Crime Squad Headquarters. The transfer will reduce the HO/LACAP cash limit from £89,546,000 to £89,056,000.

Transfers to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of £50,000 for the International Drugs Co-ordinator post and £600,000 in respect of inter-departmental drugs prevention projects in Pakistan and Colombia. A transfer to the Department of Health of £350,000 in respect of the Drugs Challenge Fund.

The increase in the running costs limit is the net effect of payments relating to the transfer of responsibility for voluntary services from the Department of Culture, Media and Sport of £771,000; £30,000 for a payment from Cabinet Office in respect of the Government Information Service Head of Profession; £4,500,000 due to increased demand for passports and a transfer to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of £50,000 for the International Drugs Co-ordinator post.

The increases will be offset by transfers and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Derbyshire Police Authority

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been given to Derbyshire county council through the revenue support grant for the county's police authority in each of the last three years. [13755]

Mr. Michael: The Derbyshire Police Authority is independent from the county council, an arrangement which was consequent on the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994. It is the Police Authority which is responsible for setting the budget. The budget is made up of police grant, revenue support grant, non-domestic rates (the business rate) and the police authority precept raised through the council tax. Providing the revenue support grant figure on its own would be uninformative and I have therefore provided a table which shows how the total spending power was made up in the three years referred to in the question.

£ million

Year	Home Office grant	Revenue support grant	Non-domestic rates	Police precept (Council tax)	Total spending power
1995–96	43.76	13.71	17.8	13.02	88.3
1996–97	46.36	13.14	19.7	13.3	92.5
1997–98	48.09	14.09	18.89	15.28	96.3

Mr. Jonathan Aitken

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis is to complete his investigations into the alleged perjury of Mr. Jonathan Aitken during his High Court action against The Guardian; and if he will make a statement. [13768]

Mr. Michael: This investigation is an operational matter for the Commissioner. The Commissioner informs me that the investigation is continuing and is being pursued as expeditiously as possible. At this time the Metropolitan Police do not have a date for the conclusion of the investigation. When the investigation is complete a report will be sent to the Crown Prosecution Service.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14374]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster today.

Police Forces (Staff)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of (a) police officers and (b) civilian support staff, in each police force on (i) the last day for which figures are available and (ii) 1 May for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [13724]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The latest date for which figures are available are those for 31 March 1997. Since 1995, police numbers are collected only twice a year. The strength figures for 1995 and 1996 are therefore those at 31 March. Prior to April 1995, they were collected every month. Police strength figures for 1992, 1993, and 1994 are therefore those for 30 April. Between 30 April 1992 and 30 March 1997, the number of police officers fell by 336. During the same period, the number of civilian support staff increased by 5,568. The information is set out in tables which have been placed in the Library.

Police Act 1997

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when part V of the Police Act 1997 will be brought into force. [14174]

Mr. Michael: We are currently reviewing the provisions of part V of the Police Act 1997 in the light of our top priority in this area which is the protection of children and vulnerable adults.

Immigration

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria which govern the granting of exceptional leave to remain. [14207]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The criteria governing the granting of exceptional leave to remain depend on the particular exercise of discretion outside the Immigration Rules from which a person seeks to benefit. In addition, the Home Secretary may permit any foreign national to remain in the United Kingdom.

Sex Offenders

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new measures he proposes to take to protect the community from sex offenders who pose a risk to the public. [14703]

Mr. Straw: I have published today a consultation paper on community protection orders. Copies are available in the Library.

I propose that the chief officer of police will have the power to apply for an order in the civil courts if the behaviour of a person who has been convicted or cautioned for a sex offence, whether in this country or abroad, poses a risk of serious harm to the public.

The order will require the defendant to register under the provisions of the Sex Offenders Act 1997, if he is not already required to do so. The court may also impose other prohibitory conditions as are necessary to protect the public.

Fire Safety

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the final report of the Community Fire Safety Task Force. [14547]

Mr. Straw: I have received the report of the Community Fire Safety Task Force and made arrangements for it to be published on 3 November. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

The task force was asked last November to propose a five year strategy to reduce the number of fires and fire casualties in dwellings. It has highly commended the enthusiasm with which fire safety and prevention work is already undertaken by some brigades. It wants to build on their success by putting community fire safety at the centre of both policy and action. It recommends a more integrated and business like approach to community fire safety, with the establishment of a national centre to co-ordinate activity and an increased role for Her Majesty's Fire Service inspectorate to support brigades in the delivery of imaginative, well targeted messages. It also recommends that community fire safety should be made a statutory duty of the fire service.

I am grateful to task force members, who came from both the public and private sectors, for delivering an imaginative report in less than a year. I share their high regard for the enthusiasm and expertise of the fire service. It is a high performing service with an excellent record to which I pay tribute.

We must, however, all be concerned by the rising trend in domestic fires, deaths and casualties and the task force therefore makes a strong case for an increased and co-ordinated emphasis on community fire safety. Community safety is not solely about reducing crime. It is about our wider responsibilities to make our communities safe and confident. This report is an important contribution to that overall aim and I note that it strongly endorses the multi-agency approach.

Before I take any decisions on the details of the strategy, I want to hear the views of chief officers, fire authorities and unions who have a crucial role to play in translating the strategy into action. We will therefore be consulting interested parties over the next few months before deciding how to respond to the report.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [13261]

Mr. Straw: Expenditure by the Department, its agencies and non departmental bodies (NDPBs), on tax consultants and other tax advice for the three years in question is:

	1995–96 £	1996–97 £	1997–98 £
(a) Departmental
(i) Tax Consultants	—	—	—
(ii) Other	49,688	30,550	16,450
(b) Agencies
(i) Tax Consultants	—	—	—
(ii) Other	—	25,000	—
(c) NDPBs
(i) Tax Consultants	11,268	45,543	4,000
(ii) Other	42,475	36,672	38,070

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if he will make a statement. [13262]

Mr. Straw: The Department's policy is not to use tax advisers for tax avoidance purposes. Such advisers may be used to assist the Department in meeting its statutory tax obligations.

Remand (Juveniles)

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for implementing court-ordered secure remand for juveniles. [14548]

Mr. Michael: At present, when juveniles—aged 10 to 16 years—are charged and not released on bail after a court appearance, they are remanded to local authority accommodation. The local authority may, if it can satisfy certain strict conditions, return to the court and seek a secure accommodation order to place the juvenile in local authority secure accommodation. Separate arrangements exist for 15 and 16-year-old boys who may be remanded direct to prison, again if strict conditions are met. The courts have no power to require any juvenile in this age group to be remanded directly to local authority secure accommodation.

There are, however, existing provisions on the statute book but not yet brought into force which would allow this to happen. Section 60 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 contains provision for the abolition of prison remands for 15 and 16-years-old boys, and gives courts a power to remand these boys. as well as 15 and 16-year-old girls, directly to local authority secure accommodation. Section 20 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 provides for the extension of court-ordered secure remands to 12 to 14-year-olds but only once the provision in section 60 of the 1991 Act has been implemented for 15 and 16-year-olds.

Before the Government can implement section 60 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 and the provisions in the 1994 Act, there must be available a sufficient number of places to meet the expected demand. This is not the case at the moment. Whilst a building programme was put in place to provide 170 new secure places in local authority accommodation for this purpose, the number of juveniles remanded in custody has increased significantly since the building programme began and prison remands now typically stand within the 250 to 300 range. The demand from this group alone would significantly outstrip the capacity of the local authority secure estate even once the building programme has been completed.

The Government are keen to begin implementation of those provisions and have decided to do so in stages. The Government will, therefore, implement the provision in relation to 12 to 14-year-olds as soon as practicable.

The Government, therefore, propose:

(a) that court-ordered secure remands for 12 to 14-year-olds and 15 and 16-year-old girls will be implemented as soon as practicable; and

(b) that the courts should be able to remand the most vulnerable 15 and 16-year-old boys direct to local authority secure accommodation rather than to prison, subject to certain criteria and if a place has been identified in advance.

Under the existing legislation court-ordered secure remands for 12 to 14-year-olds cannot be implemented without first doing the same for 15 and 16-year-olds. The Government intend to use this Session's Crime and Disorder Bill to make the necessary legislative changes; Royal Assent is unlikely before summer 1998. The Government remain committed to implementing the provisions in full and will keep the position under review, but we believe that our current approach is the most practical and effective way forward.

As part of the Government's comprehensive spending review, we are also conducting a study of the whole range of secure accommodation for young people, including the local authority secure units. The Government wish to ensure that the assets and other resources employed in the accommodation and care of accused, convicted and other juveniles who need secure accommodation are used to best effect, including in meeting their educational needs and, where relevant, in tackling their offending behaviour. We will want to see how the proposed court-ordered remands and the associated accommodation fit into our plans for coming to grips with the present range of facilities which make up the juvenile secure estate. Our aim is to press on with this work as quickly as possible.

On 15 October, Directors of Social Services in England and Wales and the representative bodies of the local government associations and the directors of social services were informed of the Government's decision to implement these existing provisions. It was also suggested that there should be a meeting to discuss these proposals and the study of the juvenile secure estate. It is hoped that this meeting will take place shortly.

Raves

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to prevent the use of motorway service stations for rave parties; and if he will make a statement. [14315]

Mr. Michael: There are already powers available to the police to deal with the problem of illegal rave parties. Sections 63–67 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 empower the police to direct persons assembling on land to leave where it is believed that a large-scale gathering—of 100 or more—will take place and would cause serious distress to the inhabitants of the locality by the playing of amplified music during the night. Furthermore, in order to assist the police in preventing such events from taking place, the Act provides them with pre-emptive powers to direct people to leave the land where they reasonably believe that those people are preparing or gathering for such an event. The police also have powers to stop persons proceeding to a rave, or an intended rave, within a radius of five miles of its site.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police man-hours were spent on the policing of rave parties in the last financial year in (a) England and Wales and (b) Cheshire; [14314]

(2) what was the total cost of policing rave parties in the last financial year in (a) England and Wales and (b) Cheshire. [14316]

Mr. Michael: The information requested is not held centrally. The costs of specific activities carried out by the police is a matter for chief officers but police forces do not routinely hold information about the time spent on or the costs of individual operations. However, I understand from the Chief Constable of Cheshire that there were two rave parties in the last financial year at the M62 motorway service station at Burtonwood. A total of 220 officer hours was used in the policing of these events at a cost of approximately £3,600.

David Shayler

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the injunction against The Mail on Sunday remains in force following the publication of further disclosures from David Shayler on 2 November. [14900]

Mr. Straw: Yes. The purpose of the injunction which the High Court granted against The Mail on Sunday was to prevent it from publishing any further material which could damage national security. The terms of the injunction restrained the newspaper from publishing any information provided by Mr. Shayler, but expressly did not apply to the publication of any material in respect of which the Crown serves written notice that it does not seek to restrain publication. The Editor of The Mail on Sunday provided me with a draft of the article which he proposed to publish well in advance of the publication date. This enabled me to obtain an assessment from the Director General of the Security Service, who advised me that the article would not cause damage to national security if it were published. Notice was therefore given that we would not seek to restrain publication. The fact that the article was substantially wrong is another matter. The issue here is not necessarily whether a story is true or false as it is quite possible to conceive circumstances in which false accusations might nevertheless cause damage to national security.

This is entirely consistent with the position which the Government have adopted all along. Our concern is to ensure that nothing is published which is likely to damage national security. Former members of the Security and Intelligence Services are in a position to make disclosures which intentionally or unintentionally can cause real damage to national security. The Government cannot stand by and let that happen. We have, however, never sought to suppress criticism of the Security Service—even where that criticism is misguided or inaccurate—provided that national security is not damaged.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to change the 1997–98 cash limit or running cost limit for the Office of Public Service. [14158]

Dr. David Clark: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for the Office of Public Service (Class XVII, Vote 1) will be increased by £17,760,000 from £141,061,000 to £158,821,000 and the gross running cost limit will be decreased by £52,000 from £80,475,000 to £80,423,000.

The changes reflect the take up of end-year flexibility of £9,000,000 under the end-year flexibility scheme announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–250; an increase of £10,000,000 for gross provisions for opportunity cost rents; and transfers to the Department of Trade and Industry (Class IV, Vote 1) £300,000 and the Employment Service (Class IX, Vote 3) £940,000.

The increase will be offset by transfers or charge to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14379]

Dr. David Clark: A full list of statutory instruments laid before the House, whether under the affirmative or the negative procedure during the summer adjournment, is contained in the House of Commons Votes and Proceedings dated Monday 27 October 1997, which has been publicly available since Tuesday 28 October 1997.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Beef Refreshment Department

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what were the countries of origin of beef served in the Palace of Westminster in each of the last three months; and if he will make a statement as to the percentage of beef supplied from each country. [13962]

Mr. Turner: All beef served by the House of Commons Refreshment Department during the last three months was of British origin.

Parliamentary Groups

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what steps he is taking to ensure the compliance of all parliamentary groups and committees to be recognised and listed with the rules and undertakings required of them, with particular reference to those referring to membership. [12540]

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 27 October 1997]: At its meeting on 4 November, the Administration Committee considered whether any amendments to the existing regulations concerning All Party and Parliamentary Groups might be appropriate. The Committee determined that the current regulations, approved by the House on 20 March 1997, were adequate, and did not consider that further revision was necessary. However, I would expect any hon. Member to draw to my attention any incidences of where they consider the regulations might have been breached.

HEALTH

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what formal discussions he has held with pharmaceutical industry leaders. [13921]

Ms Jowell: My noble Friend, the Minister for Health holds the main ministerial responsibility for the pharmaceutical industry. She met representatives of their trade association, the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry, on 17 June. A further meeting is planned for 26 November. Both she and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health have also had a number of informal meetings with representatives of individual companies.

Officials also keep us in touch with matters of concern to the industry through the joint industry/government Industry Strategy Group, a forum which meets regularly to discuss issues of mutual interest.

Child Labour

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to implement the remainder of European Council directive 94/22/EC on the Protection of Young People at Work on child employment, following its consultation with local authorities and others. [13912]

Mr. Boateng: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health will announce in due course proposals further to safeguard the interests of young people at work.

NHS Charges Certificates (Stockton)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS charges certificates (AG3) were awarded in the area of Stockton borough council or the related local DSS offices; and what plans he has to improve the quality of information available to the public in respect of the use of the certificates. [13744]

Mr. Milburn: National Health Service low income Scheme charges certificates AG3 were replaced by HC3 from 1 June 1997. The new version was introduced following consumer testing and provides clear information to the user. During the period 1 December 1996, when computer records were introduced, to 31 May 1997, when the AG3 was replaced, 2,855 AG3s were sent to people providing a Stockton postcode ("TS") with their low income scheme claim.

Cash Limits

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes will be made to the cash limits of his Department in 1997–98. [13695]

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes will be made to the cash limits of his Department in 1997–98. [14054]

Mr. Dobson: Subject to parliamentary approval, the cash limit for class XI, vote 1 (hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) will be increased by £3,982,000 (from £29,349,456,000 to £29,353,438,000). This allows for a transfer of £2,457,000 from class XI, vote 2 (Department of Health administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) for the Medical Device Evaluation Service and an increase of £2,000,000 for the Drugs Challenge Fund made up of a claim on the Reserve (£1,000,000) and by transfers from class VII, vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) (£350,000), class IX, vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) (£300,000) and class XI, vote 2 (£350,000). The overall increase is partially offset by transfers of £367,000 to class XIV, vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health services and other health services (part), Wales) for Cuyler Declaration, on rebasing of funds between central budgets and health authorities; £8,000 to Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland for the National Poisons Information Service and £100,000 to class XI, vote 2 for the Xenotransplantation Interim Authority.

The cash limit for class XI, vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) will be reduced by £2,987,000 (from £998,724,000 to £995,737,000). This reduction allows for transfers of £2,737,000 for the Medical Device Evaluation Service made up of transfers to class XI, vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) (£2,457,000), class XIV, vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health services and other health services (part), Wales) (£187,000) and to the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland (£93,000); and a transfer of £350,000 to class XI, vote 1 for the Drugs Challenge Fund. The overall reduction is partially offset by a transfer of £100,000 from class XI, vote 1 as mentioned above.

The non-voted cash limit for supplementary credit approvals or personal social services (DoH/LACAP) in England is to be increased by £429,000 from (£14,700,000 to £15,129,000) in respect of the take up of the end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–250.

The Department's gross running cost limit will be reduced by £800,000 from £260,929,000 to £260,129,000. This reflects a reallocation for the NHS Health Advisory Service.

All increases will either be offset by savings, increased receipts or transfers to or from other votes or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [13267]

Ms Jowell: The Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) have spent the following on

	1995–96 £	1996–97 £	1997–98 Estimated £
(i) Tax consultants:
(a) Department of Health	nil	nil	15,000
(b) DH Agencies	nil	nil	nil
(c) NCPBs	26,000	19,000	13,000

(ii) Other external tax advice: One NDPB uses a telephone Pay As You Earn advisory service at a cost of £180 per annum.

This expenditure has been to provide advice on the proper interpretation of tax law.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the policy of his Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if he will make a statement. [13268]

Mr. Milburn: The Department has used tax advisers to enable it to fulfil its statutory tax obligations rather than for tax avoidance purposes.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his assessment on the effect of the delivery of NHS services over the next two years of the need to divert moneys from within his budget to deal with the millennium computer compliance problem in the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [13250]

Mr. Milburn: The likely cost to the National Health Service of ensuring that systems are millennium compliant is difficult to forecast accurately. Guidance has recently been issued to chief executives outlining the action they are expected to take to deal with the millennium problem. Much of the work required is likely to be funded from budgets already allocated to supporting NHS information management and technology needs.

Cold-related Illnesses

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificate as the main or contributory cause of death, took place in England and Wales in (a) 1994, (b) 1995, (c) 1996 for (i) all age groups, (ii) people aged 65 years and over and (iii) people aged 80 years and over. [14258]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Nigel Evans, dated 5 November 1997:

I have been asked to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the numbers of deaths in England and Wales where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificate as the main or contributory cause of death in 1994, 1995 and 1996.

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 30 October 1997]: I refer to the answer that I gave to the Member for Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 27 October, Official Report, column 656.

Application for funding is to inform businesses about the implications of the single currency, whether or not we join. It is a condition of the rules governing the EC funds that information measures must not be regarded as propaganda.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what disciplinary action has been taken against his special adviser Mr. Charlie Whelan for discussing market sensitive information in a public place; [13406]

(2) which Minister in his Department authorised his special advisers to brief The Times and other newspapers on the subject of the Government's policy towards European monetary union on Friday 17 October; [13407]

(3) at what locations his special adviser, Mr. Charles Whelan, conducted press briefings containing market sensitive information by mobile phone on 17 October. [13984]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The terms under which special advisers work are set out in their contracts, a model copy of which is available in the Library. These build upon the rules in force under previous Administrations.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has (a) received and (b) requested advice on the subject of EMU from Mr. Gavyn Davies, chief economist of Goldman Sachs. [13410]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Since 1 May, and following the publication of the Lord Currie reports on EMU, Treasury Ministers and officials have received representations and information from a wide range of people, including Mr. Gavyn Davies.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what legal actions his Department is pursuing against newspapers regarding reports relating to trading in the period before the publication of Government briefing on EMU. [13408]

Mrs. Liddell: None.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government have notified their European partners that the United Kingdom will not move to the third stage of economic and monetary union on 1 January 1999. [14898]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Following my statement to the House on 27 October, Official Report, columns 583–88, and in accordance with paragraph 1 of Protocol (No. 11) of the Maastricht Treaty, the Government formally notified the Council of the European Union on 30 October 1997 that the United Kingdom does not intend to move to the third stage of economic and monetary union on 1 January 1999. The Treaty enables the United Kingdom to reverse this notification after the beginning of the third stage.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is the Government's intention to rejoin the European exchange rate mechanism two years prior to entering the third stage of EMU. [13775]

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will investigate the trading in gilts futures in the period before the Financial Times story of 26 September. [13409]

Mrs. Liddell: This is a matter for the regulatory authorities and their supervisors.

Registry of Friendly Societies

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the cash limit of the Registry of Friendly Societies in 1997–98. [14753]

Mrs. Liddell: Subject to approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for the Registry of Friendly Societies Class XVI, Vote 9 will be increased by £775,000 from £3,767,000 to £4,542,000. The additional provision is required for capital expenditure arising out of the late completion of the Department's relocation project. The increase is partially funded by the take up of £189,000 carried forward under the end year flexibility scheme for capital, as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July, Official Report, cols 245–50. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Cash Limits and Running Costs

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the cash and running costs limit of Her Majesty's Treasury in 1997–98. [14754]

Mrs. Liddell: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the running costs limit for Class XVI, Vote 1 will be increased by £1,051,000 from £55,509,000 to £56,560,000 and the cash limit will be increased by £1,901,000 from £61,286,000 to £63,187,000. The increases are necessary to provide for the partial take up of running costs end year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July, Official Report, columns 245–50, to meet various new commitments (net of offsetting savings and changes in receipts); to provide for a grant in aid to the Private Finance Taskforce which succeeds the Private Finance Panel; and to give effect to the Chancellor's commitment to pay over to the Diana, Princess of Wales Memorial Fund a sum equivalent to VAT paid on "Candle in the Wind".

The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Reserve

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the size of the current reserve for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [13188]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 October 1997]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 30 July 1997, Official Report, column 347.

Departmental Expenditure Ceilings

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he has made to departmental expenditure ceilings within the controlled total for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 since the budget. [13186]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 October 1997]: The 1997–98 Summer Supplementary Estimates reallocated £65 million within the public expenditure control total. Of this £13 million was met from within existing departmental programmes and £52 million charged to the Reserve. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 14 October that £300 million would be reallocated to the NHS for patient services in 1997–98; £30 million of this would be offset by administrative savings in the health budget, £102 million from reductions in the external financing limit for BNFL and £168 million from a reduction in the MOD cash limit.

For 1998–99 the departmental expenditure ceilings within the control total remain as at the July Budget.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of general Government expenditure for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99 taking account of recent changes to the gross domestic product deflator and other factors. [13185]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 October 1997]: The Government's estimates for general Government expenditure were set out in the FSBR in July. They were £309.0 billion for 1996–97, £319.4 billion for 1997–98 and £331.3 billion for 1998–99. These reflect the Government's plans for the cash control totals and the latest forecasts for other spending.

Legal Action (Public Funding)

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what public funding has been provided for to fund legal action currently being undertaken by his special adviser, Mrs. Sue Nye. [13983]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 3 November 1997]: None.

Two-pound Coin

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the delay in introduction of the £2 coin. [13365]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The Government have decided to change the launch date of the £2 circulation coin from 3 November 1997 to March 1998 because of a potential problem with the "electronic signature" of the coin in vending and other machines. A further statement will be made when investigative work is completed.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Higher Education

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he intends to take to implement the Dearing Committee's recommendations on governing bodies in higher education; and if he will make a statement. [14061]

Dr. Howells: We are considering the responses to the consultation exercise undertaken following publication of the report of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education, including the views received on the recommendations on governing bodies in higher education, and will announce our response later in the year.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of 16 to 19-year-olds in Warrington, North constituency, broken down by ward, entered higher education in (a) 1996–97 and (b) in each of the last five years. [14060]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is not compiled centrally because, although the HESA data include the post code of each student, this is not routinely aggregated to below local authority level. The available HESA data show the number of students aged under 20 whose home LEA was Cheshire and who entered a higher education course in a UK higher education establishment (Warrington comprises around 19 per cent. of Cheshire in general population terms). The figures were 3,400 in 1994–95, 3,900 in 1995–96 and 4,300 in 1996–97. Comparable data for the years prior to 1994–95 are not readily available.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he intends to take to encourage higher education funding bodies to finance pilot projects which allocate additional funds to institutions which enrol students from particularly disadvantaged localities; and if he will make a statement. [14059]

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will follow the recommendations of the Dearing report in respect of allocating funds for higher education to those institutions committed to widening participation; and what support he plans to offer to those universities to help plan and monitor admissions and participation levels. [14359]

Dr. Howells: The Government are committed to increasing and widening access to higher education. My hon. Friend recently announced an extra £165 million for higher education in 1998–99, which includes a £36 million access package, which will benefit part-time students and those facing particular hardship, as well as an extra £4 million to enable more students to participate in higher education.

We welcome the recommendations of the Dearing report for widening access, in particular that additional funding for university places should be targeted at those institutions which put forward plans for widening access. We shall be following up these recommendations in the light of the responses to the consultation on the Dearing report.

In the meantime, we welcome the decision by the Higher Education Funding Council for England to reconvene its Advisory Group on Access and Participation. The group will be considering the possibilities for further action, including the specific actions proposed by the Dearing Committee, and will advise the Council on its access and participation strategies, including joint activity with the Further Education Funding Council and other partners.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils living in (a) the Devon county council area and (b) the Torbay travel-to-work area have been funded by the assisted places scheme in each of the last three years. [13894]

Mr. Byers: Information about the county council or travel-to-work areas from which assisted pupils originate is not collected centrally. The numbers of assisted pupils in participating schools in Devon in academic years 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 were 793,817 and 942 respectively.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have been refused all jobseeker's allowance payments after interview; and what proportion this is of those interviewed. [14216]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 5 November 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about how many people have been refused all Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) after interview, and what proportion this is of those interviewed. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Employment Service conducts many different types of interview with jobseekers. These start at the new claims stage and develop as unemployment lengthens. The new jobseeker's interview is important in establishing whether jobseekers meet the labour market conditions for receiving JSA. It is normally at this stage that a Jobseeker's Agreement is drawn up and jobseekers are made aware of their responsibilities in order to receive JSA. Thereafter, entitlement to JSA is reviewed at interviews every fortnight. We also use these opportunities to offer jobseekers further advice and help in their search for work. Jobseekers are also asked to attend a Restart Interview at regular six monthly intervals at which they are offered further advice and information about employment and training opportunities. Beyond this interviews may take place for a variety of other reasons.

Questions about a jobseeker's entitlement to JSA could arise at any of the interviews referred to above. In these instances, there may be a reference to an independent Adjudication Officer for a decision on benefit entitlement.

Statistics on the numbers and types of decisions given by ES Adjudication Officers on labour market questions are recorded in a quarterly summary, the 'Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions', a copy of which is held in the Library. As questions about a person's entitlement can arise during different types of interviews, it would be misleading to compare the total figures of disallowances with the total numbers of ES interviews in any given period. JSA claims can be disallowed on labour market grounds or because of failure to meet the conditions of benefit receipt. However, some broad indication of volumes can be given by comparing the total number of JSA new claims with the number of awards of "nil benefits". This means simply the number of JSA new claims that, following assessment by Benefits Agency who are responsible for JSA payment, result in no payment award. This could be for a wide variety of reasons for inadequate contributions, payments from previous employment, etc, to failure to meet the labour market conditions for receipt of JSA.

In the period from 1 April 1997 to 30 September 1997, 1,571,325 claims to JSA were processed and there were 239,567 awards of nil benefits. These figures are based primarily on information held by the JSA Payments System. They include a small number of claims held on the earlier ISCS system because they linked back to an earlier Income Support claim.

I hope this is helpful.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the policy of his Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if he will make a statement. [13256]

Dr. Howells: The Department's policy on tax advice is that tax avoidance advice may be necessary where there are complex tax issues. However, the Department would not incur expenditure on advice to reduce tax liability where the reduction does not relate to the pursuit of real gains in efficiency.

In practice, where particularly difficult tax issues arise, the Department consults the Inland Revenue or HM Customs directly. The Department has not purchased outside tax avoidance advice, and has no plans so to do.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non departmental public bodies on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [13255]

Dr. Howells: Neither the Department nor any of its agencies has incurred any such expenditure. Where difficult tax issues arise, the Department consults the Inland Revenue or HM Customs directly.

Information relating to expenditure on tax advice by NDPBs can only be supplied at disproportionate cost.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out the differences in the level of proposed payments of higher education tuition fees between residents of the United Kingdom according to (a) the location of the institution at which they are studying and (b) their own place of normal residence; and what are the reasons for these differences. [14058]

Dr. Howells: Full-time undergraduate students will be required to contribute up to a maximum of £1,000 a year in tuition fees, depending on their parents', spouses' or own income. The requirement will apply to students resident in all parts of the United Kingdom and studying in publicly funded institutions throughout the UK, except for medical and dental students in the fifth and subsequent years of study.

Students resident in Scotland and studying in Scottish institutions on honours degree courses that are a year longer than equivalent courses elsewhere in the UK will, however, have their fees paid in the final year of the course by the Scottish Student Awards Agency. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has decided to give special consideration to such students in the light of recommendations from the Dearing and Garrick reports and in recognition that many Scottish students have had only one year's education after statutory schooling before entering university, compared with the two years that students resident elsewhere in the UK have had.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes are planned in cash limits and running cost limits on votes within his responsibility for 1997–98. [14450]

Dr. Howells: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit or class IX, vote 1, Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services, and class IX, vote 3, Employment Department will be amended as follows:

Class	Vote	Existing cash limit (£)	Change (£)	New cash limit (£)
IX	1	9,419,464,000	85,613,000	9,505,077,000
IX	3	1,155,101,000	80,376,000	1,235,477,000

The cash limit for class IX, vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment) will be increased by £85,613,000 (of which £84,930,000 is in respect of the welfare-to-work programme and is outside the Control Total) from £9,419,464,000 to £9,505,077,000.

This is the result of an increase in £83,500,000 in capital expenditure on schools and £1,330,000 in running costs in connection with the welfare-to-work programme, and £100,000 in current expenditure on millennium volunteers, all to be financed from the windfall tax as announced in the Budget on 2 July and outside the Control Total.

The Department has also taken up part of end year flexibility amounts announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July, Official Report columns 245–50 of £1,602,000 under the capital scheme and £172,020,000 under the structural funds scheme. An increase of £1,019,000 in expenditure on specialist schools in Section T has been offset by a corresponding decrease in the DfEE/LACAP cash limit from £73,126,000 to £72,107,000; and £40,000 has been switched from Section O (a cash limited section) to Section P (a non-cash limited section) to support additional expenditure on school council pensions.

A transfer of £300,000 has been made to class XI, vote 1 (Department of Health) for the Drugs Challenge Fund and £162,000 to class XIV, vote 2 (Welsh Office) in respect of National Vocational Qualifications. In addition, a transfer of £3,015,000 in running costs and £1,579,000 in appropriations in aid has been made to class IX, vote 3 (Employment Service) in respect of the lease for the 236 Grays Inn Road building in London. The opportunity has also been taken to transfer £600,000 from running costs to current expenditure in Section O to reclassify some expenditure on publicity.

The cash limit for class IX, vote 3 (Employment Service) will be increased by £80,376,000 from £1,155,101,000 to £1,235,477,000. The increase results from the following: £78,000,000 in respect of the welfare-to-work programme of which £48,000,000 is running costs, £25,000,000 is capital provision, and £5,000,000 is current expenditure, all financed from the windfall tax; a transfer of £3,015,000 in running costs and £1,579,000 in appropriations in aid from class IX, vote 1 (DfEE) in respect of the lease for the 236 Grays Inn Road building in London; and a transfer of £640,000 in running costs and £300,000 in capital expenditure from class XVII, vote 1 (Cabinet Office) for the lease of Ebury House, Aberdeen.

I also wish to take this opportunity to announce that the Office for National Statistics has advised that with immediate effect, Remploy Limited, should be classified as a public corporation in order to comply with the requirements of the 1995 european System of Accounts. This is a technical change only and will not affect Remploy's status as a non-Departmental Public Body, not its relationship with the Department.

As a result of these changes, the running costs provision within the Control Total for class IX, vote 1 (DfEE) will be decreased by £3,577,000 from £255,564,000 to £251,987,000 whereas the running costs provision within the Control Total for class IX, vote 3 (Employment Service) will be increased by £3,655,000 from £801,576,000 to £805,231,000. The overall running costs limit for the DfEE is therefore increased by £78,000 from £1,057,140, to £1,057,218,000.

As a result of provision relating to the welfare-to-work programme, running costs provision outside the Control Total for class IX, vote 1 (DfEE) is £1,330,00 and for class IX, vote 3 is £48,000,000, giving a non-Control Total running costs limit of £49,330,000.

The control total element of the increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

SCOTLAND

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he intends to make to the cash limits and running costs provision for 1997–98 within his responsibility. [14840]

Mr. Dewar: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, I intend to make changes to nine voted cash limits, four non-voted cash blocks and seven running cost limits:

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 1, Agriculture, fisheries and environmental services, Scotland, will be increased by £3,117,000 from £309,772,000 to £312,889,000. Within this total, the running costs provision has been increased by £617,000 to £29,826,000. This takes account of £305,000 take up of end year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July (Official Report: columns 245–50) for Agency running costs, and a transfer of £2,812,000 from vote 6 to provide additional grant in aid for the Scottish Environment Protection Agency and additional running costs for the Fisheries Research Services Agency and Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 2, Local Government, Housing, Transport, Other Environmental Services and European Funds, Scotland will be increased by a net total of £10,301,000 from £5,473,575,000 to £5,483,876,000. The net increase reflects a transfer of £3,000,000 from SO/ERDF to cover expenditure on the empty homes and rough sleepers initiative; an increase of £1,350,000 from SO/ERDF to cover additional costs to local authorities as a result of implementation of the Pennington recommendations; a transfer of £150,000 from class V, vote 2 for the Edinburgh City car club project; an increase of £600,000 for the Council Tax District Equalisation Scheme and £1,586,000 for the Council Tax Collection scheme transferred from SO/ERDF and SO/LA1 respectively; an increase to provision for Historic Scotland of £1,845,248 covering an increase in running cost provision of £1,390,248, and an increase of £455,000 in capital provision reflecting take up of end year flexibility entitlement in respect of capital; an increase in provision of £25,000 for the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland, offset by a matching reduction in class XIII, vote 6; a net increase of £1,245,000 for Roads and Transport (covering a gross increase in Roads capital of £8,620,000, an increase in the Northern Isles Ferry Services of £2,549,000 and an increase in Piers and Harbours Grant of £468,000 and offset by decreased Roads current expenditure of £5,000,000 and increased appropriations-in-aid of £5,392,000) reflecting the take up of end year flexibility; and the take up of end year flexibility for Caledonian MacBrayne (£300,000) and Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd. (£200,000).

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 3, Education, industry, arts and libraries, Scotland, will be increased by £4,303,000 from £1,667,405,000 to £1,671,708,000. The increased cash limit takes account of £7,435,000 in respect of end year flexibility arrangements for capital expenditure relating to the National Museums of Scotland, the Scottish Office Pensions Agency and inward investment. The increase also includes £360,000 in respect of end-year flexibility arrangements for running costs expenditure relating to the Student Awards Agency for Scotland and the Scottish Office Pensions Agency. The changes include transfers from class XIII, vote 6 totalling £300,000 in respect of both Agencies. The increase also includes a transfer of £275,000 from class IV, vote 1 in respect of support schemes and a transfer of £2,000,000 from SO/ERDF for Early Intervention. The Supplementary takes account of a transfer of £317,000 to class XIII, vote 6 in respect of software development and a reduction of £5,750,000 as a contribution towards increases in provision elsewhere in class XIII. Certain other transfers have taken place within the vote as a result of changes in Ministerial responsibilities.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 4, Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland, will be increased by a net total of £78,745,000 from £3,628,304,000 to £3,707,049,000. The increase includes £58,798,000 reflecting the take up of end-year flexibility; a transfer of £37,000 to class XIII, vote 6 for additional expenditure by the Mental Welfare Commission on information technology and some adjustments to reflect changes to anticipated appropriations-in-aid. The NHS Trusts' External Financing Limit has also been decreased by £16,447,000 from £–11,590,000 to £–28,037,000.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 5 will be increased by £2,446,000 from £660,189,000 to £662,635,000. The increase includes the take up of end-year flexibility of £1,047,000 under the capital scheme and £699,000 under the HPSS scheme. £700,000 will be transferred from SO/ERDF to cover the advance vote 5 received from the Contingencies Fund for the referendum publicity costs. There will also be a number of minor transfers within the vote.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 6, Scottish Office Administration, is being decreased by £81,000 to £150,074,000. Within this total the running cost provision for Scottish Office Administration is being increased by £2,257,000 to £136,142,000 as a result of the take-up of end-year flexibility, primarily to finance the taking forward of various new policy initiatives and inter-vote transfers. Provision for capital expenditure is being reduced by £2,608,000 to £13,305,000 as a result of various transfers, primarily one of £2,500,000 to class XIII, vote 1 for the Scottish Environment Protection Agency. Provision for other current expenditure is being increased by £270,000 to £8,968,000 as a result of the take-up of end-year flexibility for health expenditure to cover computer system costs at the Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 7, General Register Office for Scotland, is being increased by £750,000 to £5,817,000. Within this total, the running costs provision for GRO(S) is being increased by £150,000 to £7,550,000 as a result of the take-up of end-year flexibility to finance preparatory work for the 2001 Census. The increase in capital provision results from the take-up of end-year flexibility to cover costs of continuing refurbishment work at New Register House. The reduction in appropriations in aid is in respect of an expected fall in receipts from running the NHS Central Register, caused by a reduction in the cost of GRO(S) of operating the Register being reflected in lower charges.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 8, Scottish Record Office, is being increased by £750,000 to £5,172,000. Within this total the SRO running costs provision is being increased by £300,000 to £4,745,000 as a result of the take-up of end-year flexibility to fund implementation of an internal reorganisation of the Department, which is aimed at delivering future efficiency savings. The increase in capital provision results from the take-up of end-year flexibility to cover costs of continuing refurbishment work at General Register House.

The cash limit element for class XIII, vote 9, Administration of justice, Scotland will be increased by a net figure of £1,700,000. This reflects an increase in capital provision of £3,000,000 to £15,700,000 offset by an increase in appropriations-in-aid of £1,300,000 to £17,341,000. Of the net figure, £1,055,000 will be met by the take up of capital end year flexibility and the remainder will be found by a reduction in running cost end-year flexibility entitlement of £645,000. The additional expenditure is required to meet the revised and higher costs of major building projects which are nearing their end-stage.

The External Financing Limit for the East of Scotland Water Authority will be increased by £5,750,000 from £51,690,000 to £57,440,000. The increase will be offset by a matching reduction in the cash limit of class XIII, vote 3.

The non-voted cash limit SO/LA1, which covers non-housing capital expenditure by local authorities, is to be increased by a net total of £22,012,830 from £389,428,000 to $411,440,830. The increase reflects the transfer of £1,586,000 to class XIII, vote 2 reflecting provision for the Council Tax Collection Scheme, and the transfer of £1,448,830 from class XIII, vote 5 in respect of CCTV scheme, and the take up of end year flexibility of £22,150,000.

The non-voted cash limit SO/LA2 which covers housing capital expenditure by local authorities will be increased by a total of £4,298,000 from £179,928,000 to £184,226,000 in respect of the take up of end year flexibility.

The non-voted cash limit SO/ERDF which covers European regional development fund expenditure in Scotland will be increased by £30,300,000 from £95,900,000 to £126,200,000. The increase takes account of the end year flexibility carried over from the financial year 1996–97.

All increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

A new non-voted cash limit will be introduced for the Capital Receipts Initiative (SO/CRI), subject to the passage of legislation, to cover the Government's initiative to release additional resources to support local authority spending on new Housing Partnerships and Welfare to Work. The limit on expenditure is set initially at £12,470,000. This expenditure is classified as outside the Control Total.

The information for non departmental public bodies is not held centrally.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the policy of his Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if he will make a statement. [13252]

Mr. Dewar: It is the policy of my Department to obtain such advice as is necessary to ensure that the correct amount of tax is paid on its activities.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect on hill farmers of reductions in the hill livestock compensatory allowances. [14181]

Mr. Rooker: The autumn review of the economic conditions in the hills and uplands is in progress. Rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances will be determined in the light of that review and announced to the House shortly. On the day of that announcement, the economic data which form the basis of the review will be placed in the Library of the House.

Beef Export Ban

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made towards lifting the export ban on British beef with UK European partners; and if he will make a statement. [13895]

Mr. Rooker: In accordance with the procedure laid down in the Florence agreement, the Commission is working on a proposal for an export certified herds scheme for consideration by the Standing Veterinary Committee. This reflects the most recent opinion for the Scientific Veterinary Committee on the UK papers. The Commission has said it expects its proposal to be presented within weeks.

We have submitted a second proposal to the Commission for a date-based export scheme which would permit export of meat from animals born after 1 August 1996. We are presenting this to be considered by the relevant scientific committees as soon as possible.

My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food maintain regular contact with President Santer, Commissioners Bonino and Fischler and members of the European Parliament to emphasise the importance we attach to rapid progress on lifting the export ban.

WALES

Welsh Assembly

11. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the Government's White Paper on proposals for a Welsh Assembly. [12385]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have received representations in the form of letters both to me personally and to the Welsh Office, telephone calls to the Assembly information line, and e-mails to the Assembly website.

The great majority of the communications were requests for factual information, for example about absent voting arrangements in the referendum. Of the rest, there was generally a balance between those in favour of the Government's proposals, those neutral and those against.

Among the specific issues raised have been:

the powers of the Assembly

the use of Welsh language in the Assembly's work costs

the qualities required of Assembly members the location of the Assembly.

18. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who will speak on behalf of Wales in the House if a Welsh Assembly is set up; and if that person will be authorised to speak on behalf of that body. [12392]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Secretary of State for Wales will continue to represent Welsh interests in this House. The holder of that office will need to take account of the Welsh Assembly's views on various issues.

20. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the outcome of the referendum on a Welsh Assembly. [12394]

25. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the result of the referendum on the Welsh Assembly. [12400]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer my hon. Friend's to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Banbury, (Mr. Baldry).

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the administrative cost of setting up the Assembly and of running it for the next five years. [12398]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have placed full details of the estimated set-up and running costs of the Welsh Assembly in the Library of the House, as part of the answer I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea West on 23 July this year, Official Report, column 638.

Referendum Campaign

12. Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the expenditure by his Department on the referendum campaign. [12386]

Mr. Ron Davies: Total expenditure on Referendum information and publicity was some £575,000. Of this, about £300,000 was accounted for by the costs of the White Paper and associated information material.

13. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what ways Welsh Office Ministers were involved in the referendum campaign in Wales. [12387]

Mr. Ron Davies: Alongside our official duties, I and my Ministerial colleagues campaigned vigorously and wholeheartedly for a YES vote.

Agriculture

14. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet his European counterparts to discuss Welsh agricultural matters. [12388]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend is visiting Brussels next week and he will be having discussions on Welsh agricultural matters with the Commission.

Agri-environmental Scheme

15. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what response he has received from farming organisations and environmental interest to his announcement of an all-Wales, whole-farm, agri-environmental scheme. [12389]

Mr. Win Griffiths: A number of farming and environmental organisations have welcomed my right hon. Friend's announcement and have written to him and to the Department about implementation of the scheme.

Tuition Fees

16. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from students regarding tuition fees. [12390]

Mr. Hain: The Department has received some 14 representations from students about tuition fees. Some have come from the National Union of Students and others have come from individual students.

Waiting Lists

17. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he will be taking to reduce NHS waiting lists in Wales before the end of 1997. [12391]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I am determined to reduce the waiting lists inherited from the previous Administration.

I have just announced a further £9.5 million of new money this year to tackle the pressures of winter emergency admissions. This is in addition to the £1.747 million also being provided this year to improve cancer services in Wales.

Roads Programme (Review)

19. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress is being made on the review of the roads in Wales programme; and when he expects to make an announcement on the outcome. [12393]

Mr. Hain: The consultation period on the review of the trunk road programme ended on 31 October. Two hundred trunk road representations have been received and these are being assessed. It is too early to say when I will be in a position to make an announcement on the outcome of the review.

Nursery Education

21. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the funding of nursery education for children who attend nurseries outside their local authority area. [12396]

Mr. Hain: The authority securing provision, whether within or outside its area, is responsible for funding it.

Economic Development (North Wales)

22. Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next plans to visit north Wales to discuss economic development with local authorities, business and trade unions. [12397]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend and I have no such plans at present. Pressure of business in the House will restrict the extent to which it is possible for us to undertake such visits. However, during the recess, I and my right hon. Friend and I have taken the opportunity to visit North Wales on many occasions and discussed economic development issues with numerous organisations, including the North Wales Economic Forum.

NHS (Cynon and Merthyr Valleys)

23. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for the NHS in the Cynon and Merthyr valleys. [12395]

Mr. Win Griffiths: It is the responsibility of Bro Taf Health Authority to assess the health needs of people in these areas, and to plan and prioritise health care services within the resources they have available. They should do this in consultation with service providers, local authorities, the Community Health Councils and other interested parties. However, I am continuing to take a close interest in health care provision in these valleys.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

24. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the environmental impact of the Cardiff bay barrage project. [12399]

Mr. Ron Davies: A full assessment of the environmental impact was undertaken before work on the Barrage began. A copy of an Environmental Statement which supported the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill is available in the Library of the House.

Details of the environmental implications of the regeneration strategy are operational matters for the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation, which is responsible for producing environmental statements for specific projects and complying with environmental legislation.

Inward Investment (Newport)

26. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to visit Newport to discuss inward investment. [12401]

Mr. Hain: While I do not have any immediate specific plans to visit Newport, I am keen to see the area build on its enviable inward investment success and to see the benefits of this spread throughout Wales, not just through the encouragement of inward investment but through the growth of indigenous business too.

Windfall Tax (Hydwr)

27. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made regarding the effect on ability to reinvest in infrastructure of Hydwr, formerly Welsh Water and Electricity, of the imposition of the windfall tax in the Budget. [12402]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has made it clear that the Government does not expect the windfall tax to have any adverse impact on investment.

The company has also stated publicly that it remains committed to its current programme of discretionary capital expenditure.

Parliamentary Constituencies

28. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the future number of parliamentary constituencies in Wales. [12403]

Mr. Ron Davies: None.

Local Government Finance

29. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of local government in Wales to discuss local authority funding for 1998–99. [12404]

Mr. Ron Davies: I chaired a meeting of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 27 October 1997.

Arms Trade

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines his Department has given to the Welsh Development Agency with regard to sponsoring or otherwise supporting conferences in Wales aimed at encouraging trade in arms. [13325]

Mr. Hain: The Department issued guidelines covering each of the Agency's programmes in March 1995. Copies of the guidelines were placed in the Library of the House. Sponsorship and support for conferences, seminars and exhibitions is covered by the Agency's marketing guidelines. They do not specifically cover the Agency's involvement in activities related to defence industries. However, the Agency is aware of the Government's policy announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary which requires defence exporters to take account of ethical considerations.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he took to assess the experience and suitability of Mr. Bryan Riddleston of Celtic Energy before appointing him to serve on the board of the Countryside Council for Wales; and what other candidates he considered for the position. [13752]

Mr. Ron Davies: I followed the procedures set out in the code of practice of the Commissioner for Public Appointments whereby applicants are considered by a panel with independent membership. This panel recommended the appointment of Mr. Riddleston. Mr. Riddleston was one of 14 candidates interviewed. A total of 167 applications were received for membership of the Countryside Council for Wales.

University Students

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount of university funding per student in Wales in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96, (c) 1996–97 and (d) 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [13226]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 30 October 1997]: Information on higher education funding per student in Wales for the financial years requested is as follows:

1995–96: £4,760
1996–97: £4,789
1997–98: £4,634

Countryside Council

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the status of the Countryside Council for Wales will be under his proposals for the Welsh Assembly. [14190]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Government's intentions are explained in its White Paper "A Voice for Wales". The Assembly will be able to review a number of non-departmental public bodies, and have the power to reduce their number further or merge them. However, the Countryside Council for Wales will not be subjected to this power in order to maintain its independence and its ability to meet the UK's European and other international obligations in nature conservation. The Assembly will, however, assume all the Secretary of State's responsibilities, including those of funding and appointment, in respect of the Council.

Cash Limits

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he is proposing to make to the voted and non-voted cash limits for his Department and the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales in the current financial year. [14221]

Mr. Ron Davies: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, I intend to make the following changes. The cash limit on class XIV, vote 1 will be reduced by £750,000 from £53,462,000 to £52,712,000 as a result of lower than expected claims for local authority coast protection schemes.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 2 will increase by £13,594,000 from £785,732,000 to £799,326,000. This increase results mainly from the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlements for the Welsh Development Agency (3,400,000); the Grant Maintained and Voluntary Aided Schools captial programmes (£2,720,000), an increase to the provision for Regional Selective Assistance of £1,710,00 and a transfer of £577,000 from class IV in respect of the Competitiveness Fund. The increase also includes the £5,025,000 extra resources announced in the July Budget for schools capital. (This expenditure forms part of the Welfare to Work programme and is outside the Control Total).

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 3 will be increased by £4,074,000 from £437,196,000 to £441,270,000, (including an increase in the Department's running costs limit of £1,862,000 from £72,035,000 to £73,897,000). This increase is mainly a result of the take-up of end-year flexibility amounts for the Central Government Roads Programme (£1,545,000), IT costs (£603,000) and central administration (£2,161,000).

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 4 will be increased by £28,102,000 from £1,979,708,000 to £2,007,810,000. This increase results mainly from the take-up of end-year flexibility amounts of £8,000,000 for NHS Trusts and £10,000,000 mainly for GP Fundholders and the £9,548,000 additional resources recently announced for the NHS. The external finance limit for NHS Trusts has been increased by £8,000,000 from £44,914,000 to £52,914,00.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 5 will be increased by £200,000 from £2,340,554,000 to £2,340,754,000 to enable the Valuation Office Agency to deal with the higher than expected demand for council tax and business rate appeals.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 6 will be reduced by £400,000 from £10,105,000 to £9,705,000 as a result of lower than expected expenditure on Nursery place inspections.

There is also an increase to the non-voted local authority capital cash limit, WO/LACAP. This cash limit has been increased by £10,682,000 from £422,680,000 to £433,362,000 as a result of the take-up of end-year flexibility amounts, mainly to cover slippage on the Strategic Development Scheme and Capital Challenge projects.

All increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

A new non-voted cash limit will be introduced for the Capital Receipts Initiative (WO/CRI), subject to the passage of legislation, to cover the Government's initiative to release additional resources to support local authority spending on housing and housing associated regeneration. The limit on expenditure is set initially at £9,540.000. This expenditure is classified as being outside the Control Total.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the policy of his Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if he will make a statement. [13366]

Mr. Ron Davies: My Department does not purchase tax advice.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [13373]

Mr. Hain: Neither my Department nor its agency, Cadw, purchases external tax advice. Details of any such expenditure by those non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department are not held centrally; it is wholly a matter for them to determine as part of the day-to-day management of their affairs.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cash and Running Cost Limits

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes will be made to the cash and running cost limits for her Department, the Office of Telecommunications, the Office of Gas Supply and the Office of Electricity Regulation for 1997–98 and to the external financing limit of BNFL for 1997–98. [14899]

Mrs. Beckett: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 1—Department of Trade and Industry: programmes and administration—will be increased by £4,656,000 from £1,344,410,000 to £1,349,066,000. This net increase results from:

(i) the take up of running costs and capital end-year flexibility (£5,783,000) as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997 (Official Report, cols 245–250);

(ii) the transfer of £300,000 from the Cabinet Office: Office of Public Service (Class XVII Vote1) to the Department's accommodation budget; offset by:

(iii) a net reduction of £852,000 in the Local Competitiveness budget as a result of transfers to the Scottish and Welsh Offices;

(iv) an increase of £575,000 in fee income from the supervision of insurance companies.

Within this total, the gross running costs limit for the Department of Trade and Industry will be increased by £5,244,000 from £366,693,000 to £371,937,000. This change comprises the take-up of running costs end-year flexibility and includes payment of £25,000 to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport in respect of the transfer of responsibility for music sponsorship.

The take up of the Department's running costs and capital end-year flexibility (£5,783,000) will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class IV Vote 8—Office of Telecommunications—will be increased by £353,000 from £10,408,000 to £10,761,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £353,000 from £9,993,000 to £10,346,000. These changes reflect extra resources required for work on numbering administration and give effect to the end-year flexibility carry-forward of £280,000 announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Also, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class IV Vote 9—Office of Gas Supply—will be increased by £1,053,000 from £10,075,000 to £11,128,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £950,000 from £11,412,000 to £12,362,000. These changes reflect the extra resources required for the extension of competition in the domestic gas market, and give effect to the end-year flexibility carry-forward of £103,000 on capital announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Additionally, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class IV Vote 10—Office of Electricity Regulation—will be increased by £2,000,000 from £13,950,000 to £15,950,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £2,000,000 from £14,635,000 to £16,635,000. An increase in receipts to the consolidated fund of £2,000,000 is expected as a consequence of the increase in running costs. These changes reflect the extra resources required by the Director General of Electricity Supply to fulfil his obligations under the Electricity Act 1989, and to meet the deadlines set for deregulation of the franchised electricity supply market. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

In addition to these changes, the External Financing Limit of BNFL has been adjusted from –£67,000,000 to –£169,000,000 to reflect an improved trading performance since the External Financing Limit was set in the 1996 budget.

Airfares

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action her Department is taking to ensure that full and inclusive pricing is introduced for airfares. [12984]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The practices of some operators in quoting prices for airfares may be misleading, in breach of Part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

The Advertising Standards Authority Council are due to meet on 7 November to deliberate on whether certain airfare advertisements are in breach of the British Code of Advertising and Sales Promotion.

I have made clear to the airline and travel industry my concern that consumers must have clear and transparent pricing information.

Arms Sales

Sir Richard Body: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of the value of Export Credits Guarantee Department coverage has been provided for arms sales in each of the last three years; and what was the total coverage provided for arms sales in each of those years. [12724]

Mrs. Beckett: From Information readily available on ECGD's files the details requested are as follows:

Financial year	Value of ECGD cover provided for defence business £ million	Value for cover for defence business as a percentage of total cover
1996–97	384	16.3

These figures include all ECGD covered business with defence buyers, including sales of non-lethal equipment.

Bananas

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will place in the Library those parts of the world trade agreement relevant to its recent finding in respect of bananas together with a copy of the full finding or judgment, stating where, when and in what manner it was made and to whom it was addressed in the first instance. [13391]

Mrs. Roche: A copy of "The Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations", which includes the agreements relevant to the recent World Trade Organisation (WTO) ruling on the European Community banana regime, is currently in the Library of the House. The WTO Dispute Settlement Body ruling was sent to H.E. Mr. Roderick Abbott, Ambassador and Permanent Representative of the European Communities to the WTO on 9 September 1997 and was adopted at the WTO Dispute Settlement Body meeting of 25 September 1997. Copies of both Panel and the Appellate Body rulings have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what persons, and from which national or community body, represented United Kingdom interests in the course of proceedings at the World Trade Organisation concerning the arrangements of trade in bananas; what was the nature of the negotiating mandate given to that person and by whom; and to what body, other than Her Majesty's Government were (i) the nature of such a mandate and (ii) its existence communicated. [13389]

Mrs. Roche: A World Trade Organisation (WTO) Dispute Settlement Panel was established in May 1996 to consider a complaint against the European Community's banana regime, following unsuccessful consultations with the complainant countries (the United States, Guatemala, Mexico, Ecuador and Honduras). Since the European Community (EC) has competence in external trade matters, United Kingdom interests in the subsequent proceedings at the WTO were represented by officials from the Commission Legal Services. The EC defended its policy and the United Kingdom supported the Commission's defence of this policy. A negotiating mandate was not required in this case. The framework for the conduct of the EC's common commercial policy is set out in Article 113 of the EC Treaty.

Retail Newsagents

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what factors underlay her decision not to refer the concerns of the retail newsagents to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [13192]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The decision on whether or not to make a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading.

The Director General is considering a number of detailed submissions from interested parties in the industry arguing for and against another reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, and will announce his decision in due course.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects the EC draft directive on consumer protection in the indication of the prices of products offered to consumers to be adopted; and if she will make a statement. [14102]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: This will depend on the rate of progress in the conciliation procedure between the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament. The first meeting of the Conciliation Committee is scheduled for 6 November.

Fibreboard

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will estimate the total volume in each of the last five years of the sales of wood products whose construction involved medium-density fibreboard. [13893]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 3 november 1997]: No. This information is not available from official statistics.

Photocopier Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to request a further inquiry into the photocopier industry by the Director General of Fair Trading. [13041]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 29 October 1997]: As I informed the right hon. Member in my letter of 6 October

"My Department has received complaints about current business practices in the industry. These are being passed to the Director General of Fair Trading who will take any decision on whether these complaints relate to general practices in the industry which might require him to reopen his investigation into the photocopying industry, or are against particular consumer credit licence holders and can be addressed under his licensing powers."

Ministerial Interests

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs has advised Copywatch UK not to use his name in promotional literature. [13049]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 29 October 1997]: Copywatch have never claimed to be an advisor to me in my ministerial role. They previously advised me of malpractices in the photocopying industry as opposition spokesman for consumer affairs.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on what funding provision has been made to accommodate the expenditure needed to resolve the computer millennium problem; and if she expects to have sufficient funding to pay for the work necessary to achieve complete millennium compliance by 1 January 2000. [13584]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The DTI plans to allocate £2.7 million to the resolution of this problem within the core Department. Agencies are pursuing their own programmes of work and have planned their own allocations.

The Department expects to have sufficient funding available to achieve compliance within existing PES provision.

Mr. Malcom Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in her Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which she is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if she will make a statement. [13582]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The DTI did provide a costed plan for dealing with this problem within the Department to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency by 1 October as requested. Agencies are pursuing their own programmes of work which include the preparation of such plans. Related public bodies have been advised to prepare plans for their own computer systems and officials are seeking confirmation that this work is in hand. Once the costed plans have been analysed by the Central IT Unit and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster will then inform Parliament. The plans will then be available to the public.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when her Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which she is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if she will make a statement. [13585]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The millennium compliance audit within core DTI was completed in October 1996. Chief Executives of next steps agencies and other public bodies are responsible for programmes within their own organisations which include such audits.

European Information Technologies Research Project

Sir Richard Body: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she will take to ensure that the ESPRIT programme of the European Union maintains political impartiality in schools; and if she will make a statement on the experimental schools environment project. [13851]

Mrs. Roche [holding reply from 30 October 1997]: The ESPRIT Programme, the European Information Technologies research programme, is impartial in its content and management. All European Union Member States contribute to the development of the Programme's technical scope through a range of technical, industrial and academic experts. The funds are allocated to proposals from collaborative European consortia through a competitive selection process, using published criteria. This process has been designed to avoid any bias whether political, national or commercial. My Department will continue to represent UK interests in the management of the ESPRIT programme, assuring impartiality for all participants. The Experimental Schools Environment is an initiative within ESPRIT, calling for proposals to research new kinds of Information Technology based tools or environments designed to enable new approaches to learning for young children in the age range of 4 to 8 years. Further information is in the ESPRIT Information Pack in the Library of the House.

Coal Mining Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many coal pits have closed since 1 May. [13554]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 30 October 1997]: The closure of two deep mines have been announced since 1 May; Asfordby Colliery in Leicestershire, owned by RJB Mining and Baddesley Drift in Warwickshire, owned by New Baddesley Coal Ltd.

Defence Sales

Sir George Young: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of export credits has been used to support defence sales since 1994. [13790]

Mrs. Beckett: From data readily available, the information requested is as follows:

Financial year	Value of ECGD cover provided for defence business as a percentage of total cover
1996–97	16.3

These figures include all ECGD covered business with defence buyers, including sales of non-lethal equipment.

Sir George Young: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the monetary value of export credit sales used to support defence sales since 1994. [13791]

Mrs. Beckett: From data readily available, the information requested is as follows:

Financial year	Value of ECGD cover provided for defence business £ million
1994–95	725
1996–97	384

These figures include all ECGD covered business with defence buyers, including sales of non-lethal equipment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Supported Housing

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has for consultation on the long-term funding arrangements for supported housing; and if she will make a statement. [14901]

Ms Harman: Securing stable, sustainable long-term funding arrangements for supported housing will take time. The Government are keen to take the views of those working in the field before making any decision. I am therefore setting out our objectives for the long term. These are:

A Government-wide approach

Clarifying responsibilities for controlling, targeting, and prioritising public expenditure on services supporting people in their homes—avoiding gaps and overlaps between budgets

Ensuring the funding system can respond to individuals' needs and enable support to be provided in different types of accommodation and tenures

Avoiding the possibility that accommodation choices may be distorted by the availability and interaction of different funding (this may result from the inter action of demand-led and cash-limited funding streams)

Encouraging coherent and transparent planning, funding and accountability arrangements—at the appropriate level—for support services in the context of wider community care and related programmes

Compatibility with the Government's wider social policy objectives

Encouraging the most cost effective approach across all sectors which takes account of all public expenditure costs; group and wider funding responsibilities, and links with other changes that authorities face

Practicality—identifying solutions that are workable at central and local levels which could be implemented reasonably simply, considering what transitional arrangements might be necessary.

Departmental officials will be contacting over two hundred individuals and organisations who responded to last year's Social Security Advisory Committee consultation. The Committee's report was published last week. We shall now ask respondents for their views on how best to translate these objectives into a modern, practical and sustainable funding system for this valuable social provision. Others who may wish to contribute to the debate are welcome to do so. Representations will be taken up to 5 December 1997.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the policy of her Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if she will make a statement. [13270]

Mr. Field: The Department of Social Security follows the guidance and advice issued to Government departments by HM Treasury. It does not purchase any advice on tax avoidance.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the expenditure by (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if she will make a statement. [13269]

Mr. Field: Approximately £10,000 has been spent in 1997–98 by the War Pensions Agency. Consultants were employed to review the procedures used by the Agency to account for VAT. This enabled under-deducted VAT to be identified and resulted in revised procedures being introduced. This will ensure that the Agency correctly reclaims those amounts that are due in future accounting periods within the statutory entitlements.

Inflation (Public Funding)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the additional expenditure by her Department, its agencies and other non-departmental public bodies in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 as a consequence of higher uprating for inflation than was assumed at the time of the November 1996 Budget; if increases will be financed from the contingency reserve; and if she will make a statement. [13246]

Mr. Field: Higher inflation than expected in the 1996 Budget has no effect on 1997–98 benefit spending. 1998–99 benefit rates will be announced shortly. Increases in line with prices would mean an increase in benefit spending of about £600 million above that assumed in the 1996 Budget. The Government are committed to staying within their overall spending plans.

Index-linked Pensions

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to which of the retail prices indexes pensions are linked; and on what basis the calculation is made. [13110]

Mr. Denham: We intend to honour our commitment to increase pensions at least in line with prices.

The all items Retail Prices Index for September will be used as a basis to increase Retirement Pension from 6 April 1998. The new rate of benefit will be calculated by uprating the current rate by the increase in the index and rounding the resulting sum to the nearest 5p. The value of the basic pension is being considered as part of our pensions review.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken by her Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13954]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 4 November 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 3 November, Official Report, column 5.

Information for 1997 is not yet available.

War Pensions

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the review panel looking into war pensions for noise-induced hearing loss will report. [13116]

Mr. Denham: The review of the science of the assessment of noise induced sensorineural hearing loss for the purposes of claims to war pensions is already under way. Sir Kenneth Calman the Government's Chief Medical Officer and the chairman of the review, requested written comments from the team members by 27 October 1997.

A meeting of the team is due to take place on 19 November 1997. The review team will report as soon as possible after that date once they have fully considered the scientific issues under review.

The outcome of the review will be made public.

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which her Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12570]

Mr. Field: The majority of this Department's payments for goods and services are generated via integrated computerised accounting systems, either by bank transfers (CHAPS and BACS) or as system generated payable orders. All invoices are the subject of specific checks and authorisations in accordance with standard Government accounting practice, with responsibilities for verification and certification separated from the actual process of payment.

The Department's primary accounting system is FAMIS (Financial Accounting Management Information System) and amounts due for payment are picked up overnight via the Central Payments Package and issued accordingly. The FAMIS system is based on Millennium software, substantially modified to meet Departmental needs.

The Department does not use sub-contractors for payment work although a number of private companies providing facilities management for Departmental accommodation receive invoices and undertake their initial processing prior to authorisation and payment through Departmental systems. The Department does not provide payment services to other Government Departments except where it is the major occupier of accommodation, when, under established service agreements, it may meet the initial costs and recover any balance due. The Department does not use payment systems provided by other Government Departments except where it is a minor occupier under the arrangements described above.

A variety of circumstances can apply to individual payments each of which impact on the administrative cost, but high level information collected by the Department indicates that the total administrative cost of making each payment varies between £2.30 and £5.95. The accounts payable and cashier applications which support departmental payments form elements of much wider accounting packages and specific capital and development costs are therefore not readily available.

Means-tested Benefits (Pensioners)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are (a) receiving at least one means-tested benefit and not paying income tax, (b) not receiving a means-tested benefit and not paying tax, (c) not receiving a means-tested benefit and paying tax and (d) receiving a means-tested benefit and paying tax; and if she will break down each category into five-year age bands identifying within each age group the number of (i) single male pensioners, (ii) single female pensioners and (iii) married pensioners. [12823]

Mr. Denham: The information is in the tables and is based on estimates for 1997–98 of numbers of pensioner benefit units in each of the groups.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will review the system for disability living allowance claimants to ensure claimants are properly informed at each stage of the review process as to the steps they need to take and what they are expected to prove. [12850]

Mr. Denham: We are reviewing all aspects of the Social Security system. One of our key aims is to improve the service provided to claimants and other customers.

The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 4 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about servicing the review system for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) to ensure claimants are properly informed at each stage of the review process as to the steps they need to take and what they are expected to prove.

The Disability Benefits Directorate (DBD) have no specific proposals to review this system at present. We are, however, always willing to listen and respond to feedback from our customers and representatives as appropriate.

When the DBD receive a request for a review, an acknowledgement is issued to the customer explaining that the department will contact them within 6 weeks. The review request and case papers are passed to an Adjudication Officer (AO) who considers all the evidence available and whether further information is required in order to make a decision. Further information could include clarification of the level of needs arising from the customer's condition and is often obtained by issuing a DLA 434 (Review pack) or asking for information from the GP or Carer.

On receipt of the information the AO will reconsider all of the evidence available and if a decision can be made a notification, informing the customer of the outcome will be issued.

In cases where a decision cannot be made within 6 weeks a review progress letter is issued. The letter advises the customer that the review request will be dealt with as quickly as possible and that the Agency will be in contact again as soon as further information is available.

The Agency is conscious of the need to provide an efficient service to all customers. They are not asked to prove their case but to provide a full and clear picture of their needs in order that the AO can decide the appropriate entitlement.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hours of operational low flying took place in each of the Borders and Northern Scotland areas in (a) the period 1 January to 31 December 1996 and (b) the period 1 January to 31 July 1997. [14009]

Mr. Spellar: The numbers of hours of operational low flying (OLF) flown in the Tactical Training Areas (TTAs) are as follows:

	Borders	Northern Scotland	Central Wales
1 January to 31 December 1996	311	257	61
1 January to 31 July 1997	116	116	19

The figures reflect the measures announced in August 1996 to redistribute the activity more equitably across the three TTAs, in proportion to their areas.

Military Equipment

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the legality of joint weapons purchases through the West European Armaments Organisation and the Organisme Conjoint de Cooperation en Matière d'Armaments; and if he will make a statement. [13787]

Mr. Spellar: I am aware that questions regarding the legality of these organisations were raised in recent media reports. I have no reason, however, to doubt that the arrangements envisaged are based on a sound legal footing.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of delivered military equipment between 1993 and 1996. [13788]

Dr. Reid: Statistics relating to payments for delivered equipment, as distinct from payments for work in progress on equipment contracts, are not available centrally. "Defence Statistics 1997", a copy of which is in the Library of the House, shows that total expenditure on equipment, including research and development, over the period was as follows:

1993–94: £9,200 million

1994–95: £8,819 million

1995–96: £8,537 million

1996–97: £8,460 million[1]

[1] Estimate—full details of final outturn are not yet available.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of offset agreements concluded to support military export sales between 1990 and 1996. [13792]

Mr. Spellar: Most offset agreements are concluded by British companies and the Ministry of Defence does not hold comprehensive records of their value.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary for Defence what is the value of current military equipment export orders. [13789]

Mr. Spellar: In 1996—the last year for which information is available—British companies won defence export orders worth £5.1 billion.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of offset agreements concluded as a result of United Kingdom purchases of foreign military equipment between 1990 and 1996. [13793]

Mr. Spellar: The value of UK offset, normally referred to as Industrial Participation, agreements concluded as a result of UK purchases of foreign military equipment between 1990 and 1996 is £4.4 billion.

WEU (Weapons Procurement)

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if further extension of the Western European Union's authority to procure weapons will require renegotiation of the 1948 Brussels treaty. [13786]

Mr. Spellar: No.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of his Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if he will make a statement. [13266]

Dr. Reid: The Ministry of Defence does not employ tax advisers for the purpose of tax avoidance. Occasional use is made of tax consultants to advise on compliance with and the implications of tax regulations.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of changes to the class 1 cash limits and the Defence operating costs limit for 1997–98. [14187]

Dr. Reid: Following the recent announcement by the Government that the Defence budget for 1997–98 is to be reduced by £168 million on account of overspending its 1996–97 cash limit, the class 1 cash limits will change as follows:

£000s

Class 1 vote	Current cash limit	Change	Revised cash limit
1	10,145,386	–49,256	10,096,130
2	4,806,637	–52,300	4,754,337
3	6,175,530	–63,000	6,112,530
Defence	21,127,553	–164,556	20,962,997

The reduction of £168 million has been offset by £3.444 million to reflect the transfer of PES provision from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the Ministry of Defence to meet the costs of the Department's annual subscription to the BBC World Service Monitoring Service on the organisation's move to subscription based funding in 1997–98. The costs fall to vote 1.

The impact of the reduction in the class 1 cash limits on the Defence operating costs limit will be as follows:

£000s

Class 1 vote	Current operating costs limit	Change	Revised operating cost limit
1	10,139,854	-49,256	10,090,598
2	4,806,637	-52,300	4,754,337
3	735,976	—	735,976
Total	15,682,467	-101,556	15,580,911

COPEX

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he plans to accept bookings for future COPEX events to take place on his Department's land. [14215]

Mr. Spellar: My Department would consider any such request on a case-by-case basis. I understand, however, that the 1998 exhibition has already been planned in a non-Defence establishment at Wembley.

Western European Armaments Organisation

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the legal status of the Western European Armaments Organisation. [13901]

Mr. Spellar: The Western European Armaments Organisation (WEAO) was established on 19 November 1996 when the Western European Union (WEU) Council of Ministers, meeting in Ostend, adopted the WEAO Charter, thereby granting the Organisation the status of WEU subsidiary body, in accordance with Article VIII(2) of the Modified Brussels Treaty. The WEAO constitutes an integral part of the WEU and, as such, shares in the legal personality of the WEU.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the benefits to the United Kingdom of membership of the Western European Armaments Organisation, indicating the partnership projects and the countries with which these are undertaken. [13903]

Mr. Spellar: The Western European Armaments Organisation (WEAO) was established on 19 November 1996. Participants are the 13 nations, including the UK, of the Western European Armaments Group. Since 1 April 1997, the organisation has provided essential support to a pre-existing co-operative defence research programme known as EUCLID (European Co-operation for the Long Term in Defence). The UK is an active member of this programme, currently participating in over 40 co-operative research and technology projects. As yet, no partnerships have been established within the WEAO.

Officer Training Corps

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the membership of the Officer Training Corps in each institution in which it operates. [13757]

Dr. Reid: The number of Officer Cadets, for which each Officer Training Corps (OTC) is established, is shown in the table. The actual number of Officer Cadets fluctuates through the year according to the academic calendar. The OTCs recruit above their established strength at the start of the academic year, to take account of the normal wastage rate, so that actual membership numbers level down to the established figure later in the year.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the Officer Training Corps in the most recent year for which figures are available. [13758]

Dr. Reid: The total indentifiable cost of the Officer Training Corps (OTC) for Financial Year 1996–97 was £16.7 million, which includes staff and running costs as well as property management of the OTC estate.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of members of the Officer Training Corps subsequently join the regular forces. [13756]

Dr. Reid: In the academic year 1995–96, the most recent year for which complete figures are available, a total of 260 members of the Officer Training Corps were commissioned into the regular forces. Broken down by Service, one commission was into the Royal Navy, seven into the Royal Marines, 250 into the Army and two into the Royal Air Force. The overall figure of 260 represents approximately 7.5 per cent. of the total Officer Training Corps establishment.

Eurofighter

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the common air defence requirements specified in the European staff requirement for development agreed in 1987 indicating any subsequent amendments. [13861]

Mr. Spellar: The original European Staff Requirement for Development of Eurofighter (ESR-D) was shaped by the context of the cold war, when the requirement was for an aircraft to counter massed raids of bombers under fighter escort. Following a major review, the ESR-D was reissued in January 1994 having been rewritten to reflect the radically changed political and military situation in Europe since 1987. The review took into account the dangers of regional instability, noting that a potential enemy may still have highly capable fighter aircraft; and that Eurofighter still needs to be capable of performing multiple roles on deployed operations. The aircraft offers a significant contribution to our defence capabilities.

Future Large Aircraft

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the numbers of C130Js or future large aircraft required by the Royal Air Force. [13137]

Mr. Spellar: In addition to the 25 C130J already ordered, the FLA Request for Proposal (RFP) is seeking information on orders of 40–50 aircraft to meet our Hercules Rolling Replacement requirement. The Strategic Defence Review is considering our future aircraft requirement, and the final decision on the number of aircraft the UK will buy will depend on the conclusions reached by the review and the responses to the RFP.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current estimate of the earliest in-service date for a future large aircraft with any European air force. [13138]

Mr. Spellar: The future large aircraft is expected to be available early next century.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the costs to the RAF of maintaining both C130J and FLA transport aircraft in-service simultaneously. [13140]

Mr. Spellar: A preliminary assessment of the costs of meeting our future air transport requirements was made before the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 466, that we would join partners in issuing a Request for Proposals for the future large aircraft and would be encouraging our partners to join us in seeking competing bids from other aircraft manufacturers. This assessment indicated that there was merit in exploring the purchase of the future large aircraft to operate alongside C130Js which were ordered in 1994.

We will make a further detailed assessment, which will include an analysis of the costs of in-service support, after we have received the responses to the Request for Proposals and any competing bids. This analysis, and the conclusions of the Strategic Defence Review, will inform the final procurement decision.

RAF Transport Fleet

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will invite tenders for the replacement of the next tranche of the RAF's transport fleet. [13134]

Mr. Spellar: The Request for Proposals was issued on 4 September 1997 to Airbus Industrie, Turkish Aerospace Industries and Alenia on a provisional basis pending the formation of Airbus Military Company (AMC). We are still discussing with partner nations how a competition between AMC and other aircraft manufacturers might be organised.

Hercules C130J Aircraft

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Lockheed Martin has been required to pay compensation for the late delivery of Hercules C130J aircraft. [13142]

Mr. Spellar: The Department will be seeking to claim liquidated damages from the company, which will be used to offset the additional costs incurred by the Department, as they become due.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current anticipated in-service date of the Hercules C130J. [13141]

Mr. Spellar: On current plans the Department will receive delivery of the first C130J for test and evaluation in the spring of 1998, and the first aircraft is expected to enter service by the end of 1998.

Royal Clarence Yard, Gosport

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the cost of relocating the activities currently undertaken at the 9.5 acres of land at Royal Clarence yard, Gosport, which are currently scheduled for retention by the Ministry of Defence; [13099]

(2) if his Department will release for sale the 9.5 acres at Royal Clarence yard, Gosport, which is currently occupied as a furniture store. [13098]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from D. J. Stevens to Mr. Peter Viggers, dated 5 November 1997:

I am replying to your two Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about the release for sale of land at Royal Clarence Yard, Gosport and the cost of relocating the activities, as this falls within my area of responsibility.

The 9.5 acre enclave retained by the MOD within Royal Clarence Yard primarily provides security for the oil pipe and working space to operate and service the facilities on the Oil Fuel Jetty. The waterfront provides essential berthing space for minor vessels while the major jetties within the Naval Base are being refurbished. It is not feasible to relocate these tasks in the area and therefore no figures on costs of relocation are available. In addition, the enclave provides car parking for entitled RN personnel quartered in Gosport but working on the other side of the harbour. The cost effectiveness of this was accepted by Minister (AF) (in the previous administration) as part of the submission to release the major part of the Royal Clarence Yard for sale.

Only 1.4 acres of the enclave are occupied by the furniture store. If this area of the site were released for sale, it is estimated that it would add no more than £300,000 to the sale value of Royal Clarence Yard. The cost of relocating the furniture store on Crown owned land on the Gosport peninsula has been investigated and found to be in excess of £500,000. The alternative of leasing a commercial storage facility in the area is estimated at in excess of £50,000 a year. In the current financial climate neither option would be cost effective for MOD or the taxpayer.

The retained enclave will be the minimum required to meet MOD's needs and if future opportunities were to allow the MOD to relocate any or all of the above facilities in a cost effective manner, further areas would be released for sale.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Radio Channels

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what meetings (a) he and (b) his officials have had with representatives of Children 2000 to discuss the possibility of a children's and schools' radio channel. [13369]

Mr. Fisher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not held any meetings with representatives of Children 2000. I understand that when they met his officials to discuss the White Paper "The People's Lottery" they set out their plans for a children's and schools' radio channel.

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what plans he has to support the establishment of a children's and schools' radio channel; [13371]

(2) what plans he has to ensure that one of the available digital radio channels on one of the new multiplexes will be devoted to children's and schools' broadcasting. [13370]

Mr. Fisher: My right hon Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to direct the Radio Authority in exercising its statutory responsibility to award independent radio licenses in the UK.

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the technology and planning permission issues have been addressed in respect of the transmission of the available 225kHz channel. [13368]

Mr. Fisher: The Radio Authority is presently considering the feasibility of using 225kHz for independent radio licensing. Any proposals put forward by the Radio Authority would need to be discussed with other countries by the Radiocommunications Agency under the International Telecommunication Union procedures which are designed to ensure that services can co-exist without causing interference with each other.

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he plans to award a national radio franchise on the available 225kHz frequency. [13372]

Mr. Fisher: The award of national radio licences is a matter for the Radio Authority and not for Ministers. The Radio Authority is still considering the technical feasibility of using 225kHz for an independent national service.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drugs Tsar

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Council what criteria will be applied to assess the efficiency of the work of the Drugs Tsar in respect of (a) prisons, (b) raves, (c) schools and (d) the use of illegal drugs by those who have MS. [13806]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The immediate priorities for Keith Hellawell—the recently appointed UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator—will be to review existing action against drug misuse, and then, as soon as possible, submit proposals to Ministers to develop the strategy to tackle drugs problems through effective enforcement, prevention, education and treatment. In drawing up his proposals, Mr. Hellawell will assess the effectiveness of the work currently being undertaken, which will help focus future efforts against drug misuse. The new strategy will contain objectives against which the Government's progress can be assessed.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons he instructed the public sector pay review bodies not to allow their recommendations to be influenced by the headline rate of retail price inflation; and if he will make a statement. [13647]

Mr. Darling: Pay settlements next year must be affordable and will need to take account of our commitment to keep to the existing spending plans. We have asked the pay review bodies to give this priority over other considerations, including headline RPI where the current rate is high in relation to the 2½ per cent. inflation target. Keeping pay settlements under control will help Departments to maintain the delivery of services within their budgets.

Mr. Gordon Brown: I will present the Budget Statement in the Spring. I will make an announcement of the date in due course.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date he plans to publish his consultative paper on the 1998 Budget; and if he will make a statement. [13289]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I refer to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, column 884.

[13646]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 5 November 1997]: A response will be made to the Dearing Inquiry recommendation on the treatment of student loans in due course.

Opencast Operations (Taxation)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for taxes on opencast coal mining, gravel extraction and limestone quarries in accordance with the polluter pays principle; and how these would be administered. [14282]

Dawn Primarolo: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his July Budget, work is being carried out on the environmental costs attached to quarrying. The results will inform consideration of whether there is a case for tax or other measures to ensure that these costs are reflected in prices.

Duty-free Sales

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ensure the continuation of duty free within the EU beyond 30 June 1999. [14288]

Dawn Primarolo: Any extension of intra-EU duty-free sales beyond 30 June 1999 would require a fresh proposal from the European Commission and unanimity amongst all 15 Member States.

Duty-free sales for travel outside the EU will continue after 30 June 1999.

PRIME MINISTER

Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

President Yeltsin

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had at his recent meetings with President Yeltsin concerning (a) the new Russian law on religion and (b) other issues; and what was the outcome of these discussions. [14192]

The Prime Minister: I did not discuss the law on freedom of conscience and religious association with President Yeltsin, but the British ambassador in Moscow has been assured by the Russian authorities that implementation of the law will not contravene Russia's international human rights obligations. My discussions in Moscow centred on political and economic reform, international trade issues, bilateral and foreign policy interests and the growing prospects for British business in Russia.

Millennium Projects

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to meet members of the business community to discuss millennium projects. [14245]

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to ensure that the royal yacht Britannia is made available for visits by residents in Thames boroughs during the vessel's last voyage along the Thames. [14214]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 4 November 1997]: HMY Britannia will be moored in the Pool of London from 13 to 21 November. During that time a large number of visitors will be invited to attend charitable and other events on board, and the fullest possible access is being arranged for local and national media. This approach, involving maximum use of the yacht for organised visits and events, has been adopted throughout the yacht's final tour of the British Isles; whilst she is still operational it is not safe or practicable to arrange unrestricted access for members of the public. HMY Britannia will sail under floodlight on the evening of 21 November, arriving in Portsmouth the following day to begin de-storing and other preparations for paying-off.

Departmental Regulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister which Ministers are responsible for better regulation in each Government Department. [13963]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 5 November 1997]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has overall responsibility for better regulation matters. 32. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Attorney-General when he last discussed care of victims and witnesses with the Director of Public Prosecutions. [12643]

The Attorney-General: I meet the Director of Public Prosecutions frequently to discuss matters of mutual interest. The CPS is, of course, involved in a number of major interagency initiatives to improve the service to victims and witnesses in the criminal justice system.

Extradition

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Attorney-General what recent advice his Department has given on requests from other countries for extradition of people detained in British prisons. [12642]

The Attorney-General: It is not the practice to disclose such advice or to disclose whether or not advice has been given.

Court of Appeal

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to seek an extension of his power to refer sentences to the Court of Appeal for review. [12639]

The Attorney-General: I am in discussion with colleagues about the best way to implement our manifesto commitment to extend my powers to refer cases to the Court of Appeal for review where it appears to me that the sentence is unduly lenient.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Embassies

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the usual days and hours of manning United Kingdom embassies, including provision for answering telephone calls; and if he will make a statement. [13158]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The days and hours UK embassies open for business vary from country to country, according to local custom; details are available from Consular Division within this Department. All embassies operate a duty officer system to deal with emergency telephone calls out of office hours and this Department is always ready to answer queries about embassy services.

European Treaties

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the texts of any declaration, now appended to the treaty of Amsterdam not contained in the version of 16 June, stating for each (a) if it was agreed to by a Minister of the Crown at the preceding Inter-Governmental Conference and (b) what steps have been taken to publicise it. [13528]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 30 October 1997]: Four Declarations were agreed after the Amsterdam European Council and attached to the draft Final Act of the intergovernmental conference. These are numbers 3, 10, 21 and 45. Three declarations (numbers 14, 40 and 51) were agreed before Amsterdam and were attached to the Final Act subsequently. In addition, there were eight national declarations of which the conference took note. None was made by the UK.

Ministers have agreed the text which was signed at Amsterdam on 2 October, including all declarations attached to the Final Act. All declarations are included in the final texts which have been deposited in the Library of the House and are set out in Cm 3780.

GCHQ

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many former employees of GCHQ remain eligible for reinstatement as a result of the Government's decision to restore trade union rights at this establishment; and if he will make a statement; [14100]

(2) how many of those eligible for reinstatement at GCHQ have applied; and how many of those applications were approved. [14101]

Mr. Robin Cook: About 130 staff left GCHQ as a result of the 1984 union ban, of whom 14 were actually dismissed. The remainder fell into various categories—for example, transfer to other Government Departments and early or normal retirement. I informed the House on 19 May of the procedures needed to restore normal trade union rights to the staff of GCHQ and a copy of this statement was sent to those who had been dismissed, together with an invitation to contact GCHQ's Head of Personnel to discuss re-joining on reinstatement terms. It is open to any former civil servant to apply for reinstatement, though there is no right to be reinstated, and applications are considered in terms of existing vacancies and the suitability of an applicant for a particular vacancy. Of the 14 who were dismissed, only seven were still below retirement age by the time initial discussions on the procedure for people to rejoin had taken place; discussions with these have reached varying stages. It is not known how many of the roughly 115 people who were not dismissed but who left GCHQ by other means are still below normal retirement age but GCHQ has received a total of five expressions of interest in reinstatement or transfer back to GCHQ and discussions have again reached varying stages.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many sub-bases of GCHQ are presently maintained in Northern Ireland. [13082]

Mr. Robin Cook: It is long-standing practice not to disclose the details of the operations of the security and intelligence services.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14382]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given yesterday by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 216.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases of persons missing in Sri Lanka his Department is dealing with; and if he will make a statement. [14099]

Mr. Fatchett: We are currently dealing with two cases of missing persons in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many outstanding replies his Department is waiting for from the Sri Lanka Government with respect to requests for information on missing persons; and what is the average length of time taken for that Government to respond to letters on the subject of missing persons. [14098]

Mr. Fatchett: We have no replies outstanding from the Sri Lankan Government on requests for information on missing persons; on the basis of the two recent cases, the average length of time for the Sri Lankan Government to respond substantively to letters on missing persons is 10 months.

Montserrat

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the citizens of Montserrat. [14297]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The safety of Montserratians is paramount. Scientific advice indicates that the North of the island is relatively safe. We are committed to helping to sustain a viable community there for as long as it is safe to remain. If, however, Montserratians wish, and need help, we shall provide them with financial assistance for them to relocate elsewhere in the Caribbean or the UK.

Antarctic

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the British Antarctic Survey on the depletion of the ozone layer over the southern polar regions. [14217]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The British Antarctic Survey (BAS) Meteorological and Ozone Monitoring Unit issues regular bulletins to interested scientists, Government officials and the media. These bulletins and further background information are available on the world wide web from the BAS home page (http://WWW.nbs.ac.uk).

Indonesia

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement indicating the current state of negotiations on the proposed contract for the supply of Land Rovers to Indonesia. [13797]

Mr. Fatchett: Contractual negotiations are a matter for the company concerned.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court of Appeal

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the report of the Review of the Court of Appeal (Civil Division) will be published; and when the Lord Chancellor expects to respond to it. [15143]

Mr. Hoon: The report of the Review of the Court of Appeal (Civil Division) has been published today and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

I am very grateful to the members of the review, and in particular to Sir Jeffery Bowman for chairing it. The Lord Chancellor is at present considering their conclusions and recommendations and intends to publish a detailed response early in the new year.

Living Wills

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give people the statutory right to draw up an advance directive setting out their wishes with regard to future medical treatment should they become incapacitated in the future. [13909]

Mr. Hoon: The Law Commission report on mental incapacity published in 1995 includes recommendations relating to advance statements (sometimes referred to as advance directives). As I indicated in my written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Hope) on 28 October 1997, Official Report, column 787, the Government do not consider that it would be appropriate to legislate on the basis of these recommendations without fresh public consultation. It is hoped that a consultation paper will be issued by the end of the year.

Court Cases (Processing Times)

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the time taken for courts to dispose of cases since May. [12644]

Mr. Hoon: The time taken from first listing to completion for indictable cases in magistrates courts is surveyed by the Department's time intervals survey. The June 1997 survey, the latest from which results are available, reports that the average time from first listing to completion for defendants in indictable cases was 58 days, and 21 and 29 days for defendants in summary non-motoring and summary motoring cases respectively.

For defendants committed to the Crown Court for trial, information is collected on the time from committal to arraignment or start of trial. The average time for defendants over this interval since May 1997 has been as follows: May 1997, 11.79 weeks; June 1997, 11.95 weeks; July 1997, 12.49 weeks; August 1997, 11.74 weeks; and, September 1997, 11.74 weeks.

In the county court and High Court, information on the time taken to deal with cases is recorded each March and September. Results for September 1997 are not yet available.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Haulage Companies

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last met Commissioner Kinnock to discuss EU transport issues; and if he raised the problems United Kingdom lorry drivers and haulage companies face when transporting goods through other EU countries. [13035]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions maintains regular contact with Commissioner Kinnock on a wide range of issues. My right hon. Friend, the Minister of Transport last met Commissioner Kinnock at the Transport Council on 9 October, where the weekend lorry ban imposed by some member states was one of the issues discussed. In addition, my noble Friend, the Minister for Roads, met Commissioner Kinnock on 6 October to discuss a range of road related issues—including freight transport in the EU.

Housing Needs

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into ways in which (i) existing housing stock and (ii) new housing could meet changing household needs better over individual lifespans. [13011]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department has commissioned three relevant studies:

(i) a study has recently been completed on the conversion of local authority housing to meet the changing needs of tenants;

(ii) research has just been commissioned on conversation, demolition and redevelopment, which will examine the potential of converting the existing housing stock of redeveloping sites to meet the increased demand for housing;

(iii) a feasibility study to develop an economic model of the demand and need for social housing has also just been completed;

(iv) a study has recently been completed into the cost implications of extending the building regulations to make new dwellings more accessible to disabled and elderly people.

Since (ii) has just started and (i) and (iii) have recently been completed, the Department has not yet evaluated the outputs from these studies. Evaluation of study (iv) has been taken into account in reaching conclusions on extension of the building regulations, which will be announced shortly.

Climate Change

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about recent negotiations in Bonn on a draft treaty on climate change. [13128]

Angela Eagle: The negotiating meeting in Bonn from 20 to 31 October made slow progress. The UK remains determined to work to ensure a successful outcome at Kyoto. To this end, the Deputy Prime Minister will be chairing an important meeting of developed countries in Tokyo on 8-9 November.

Rail Companies

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to increase the level of scrutiny of the performance of the newly privatised rail companies; and if he will make a statement. [13173]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Ministers have given the Franchising Director new objectives, instructions and guidance under the Railways Act 1993. These require him to maintain a comprehensive and rigorous programme of performance monitoring, and to publish a quarterly bulletin describing the operating performance of franchise operators. Comprehensive monitoring is also carried out to secure compliance with franchise agreements and to operate performance incentive regimes. Passenger Transport Executives carry out additional monitoring of performance within their areas.

The Government intend to strengthen the regulation of the railway in the interests of passengers and to establish a new Strategic Rail Authority. Decisions about what new powers are required, and whether further scrutiny would be appropriate in the future, will be taken within our review of transport policy which will lead to a White Paper next year.

Blood Alcohol Limits

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the compliance of the proposal by the European Commission to harmonize and review blood alcohol limits with the obligation of subsidiarity; and if he will make a statement. [13693]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are actively considering the case for changing the UK blood alcohol limit. Our assessment of the European Commission proposals, including the relevance of subsidiarity, will be made in the light of what we conclude is appropriate for drivers in the UK.

Municipal Public Transport

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to restore to local authorities the power to provide municipal public transport; and if he will make a statement. [13694]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no current plans to change the powers of local authorities in this respect but my Department is reviewing all aspects of the provision and regulation of local bus services as part of the development of an integrated transport policy.

Dry Stone Walls

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information his Department has collated on the rate of destruction of dry stone walls. [14396]

Angela Eagle: The latest information on national losses of dry stone walls is derived from Countryside Survey 1990. This estimated that the total length of dry stone walls in Great Britain was 191,000 km in 1990, and that the overall length of dry stone walls had decreased by about 10 per cent. since 1984.

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure the protection and good maintenance of dry stone walls in upland rural areas. [14398]

Angela Eagle: I refer to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend on 9 July 1997, Official Report, column 495, which described the grant assistance available from the Government and powers available to local authorities and National Parks for the protection and maintenance of dry stone walls.

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated to determine the effect on the biodiversity of the countryside and upland areas of the dismantling of dry stone walls. [14397]

Angela Eagle: My Department has not commissioned any such research. We are not aware of any directly relevant research on this subject, although the results of Countryside Survey 1990 showed that linear features in general were an important source of botanical diversity in the countryside.

Rural England White Paper

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to review the long-term policy proposals set out in the 1995 Rural England White Paper; and if he will make a statement. [14298]

Angela Eagle: The Government are committed to developing an integrated approach to tackling the problems of rural areas. Current policies and programmes are being reviewed as part of the Government's comprehensive spending reviews; notably the Countryside and Rural Policy spending review, conducted jointly by my Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Sewage

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the level of untreated sewage discharge released by storms or flash floods. [14036]

Angela Eagle: Sewerage systems are designed to handle the expected normal sewage load through continuous, controlled and treated discharges. Combined sewer overflows (CSOs) operate when this predetermined level is exceeded as a result of rainfall run-off entering the sewer. The sewage will be considerably diluted by the rainwater causing the overflow.

Except in areas of exceptionally high amenity value, these CSOs are not routinely monitored, so it is not possible to estimate the level of untreated sewage discharged in this way. However the design and construction of new and refurbished storm water overflows are controlled on a site specific basis by the Environment Agency on the principle that the frequency of discharge should be related to the dilution available and the uses made of the receiving water.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what was the level of sewage leakage for each of the water companies in the last year for which figures are available; [14035]

(2) what plans the Government have to implement targets for a decrease in sewage leakage. [14037]

Angela Eagle: Leakage from sewers cannot be measured in any meaningful way and there are no plans at present to set sewage leakage targets. However, information on the condition and serviceability of assets was collected by the Director General at the last periodic review. Only 3 per cent. of critical sewers and 2 per cent. of non-critical sewers were in the worst condition grade. The Director General has asked companies to report on the state of their sewers in the asset inventory and serviceability return to Ofwat next summer, as part of the periodic review process.

Car of Tomorrow Project

Mr. MacGregor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to implement the recommendations contained in the Twentieth report of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution in respect of the United Kingdom's funding for the European Commission's Car of Tomorrow project. [14423]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are committed to working in partnership with industry to develop and promote less polluting vehicles, as demonstrated by yesterday's announcement by my hon. Friend the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry, at the launch of the Foresight Vehicle LINK programme. The Government will continue to attach considerable importance to the potential contribution that European research and development can make to the development of cleaner vehicles as it discusses the make-up of the fifth framework programme with the European Commission.

Leasehold Valuation Tribunal

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to investigate the speed with which cases are processed through the Leasehold Valuation Tribunal; and if he will make a statement. [14095]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department is working with the Presidents of the Tribunals to minimise delays in the procedures which are within their control. I understand that the West Midland Leasehold Valuation Tribunal typically issues decisions within a month of the hearing. My hon. Friend may, however, have in mind three cases relating to properties in Redditch which were heard in June. These are unusually important and sensitive cases on which the tribunal has found it necessary to deliberate at considerable length. It hopes to be able to issue its decisions later this month.

County Structure Plans

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which draft county structure plans the Government office for each region has (a) responded to and (b) commented on since 1 May. [14076]

Mr. Raynsford: Since 1 May 1977, formal interventions have been made by Government Offices on behalf of the Secretary of State in respect of the deposited County Durham structure plan (objection submitted by Government Office for the North East) and the Cornwall structure plan (withdrawal of direction not to adopt by the Government Office for the South West).

In addition, comments have been submitted by Government Offices in respect of the reviews of the following structure plans:

	County
Government Office for the West Midlands	Shropshire Staffordshire Warwickshire
Government Office for the Eastern Region	Essex
Government Office for the South East	Oxfordshire

More generally, Government Offices maintain ongoing discussions with all structure planning authorities in their areas.

Lighting Systems

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to legislate for the control of light pollution from domestic and commercial security lighting systems and general floodlighting systems. [14013]

Angela Eagle: The Government believe that any problems caused by such lighting are best dealt with by raising public awareness and by providing guidance on how these problems might be avoided.

My Department, in conjunction with the Countryside Commission, has recently published a good practice guide, "Lighting in the Countryside", which provides advice to local authorities, developers, professionals and members of the public on the effects of lighting and how best to minimise its intrusiveness. Much of the advice it contains is equally applicable to urban areas.

Other wider concerns about light pollution are being considered by my officials. Any decisions on action will be taken once their work is complete.

Bridge Strengthening

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies his Department has undertaken to assess how many bridges, owned by local authorities, will need strengthening in order to meet the requirements under directive 85/3/EC. [14194]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department regularly monitors progress made by local authorities in implementing the programme of bridge assessment and strengthening, initiated in 1987.

Rural Economy

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review planning policy guidance to facilitate increased job creation in the rural economy. [14177]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's planning policy for rural areas is contained in Planning Policy Guidance note (PPG)7 which was revised in February 1997. This reaffirms that the guiding principle in the countryside should be that development should both benefit economic activity and maintain or enhance the environment.

The revised PPG7 encourages business diversification and allows for greater discrimination in favour of re-use of rural buildings for business rather than for residential purposes.

It also makes it clear that the range of industries which can be successfully located in rural areas, without causing unacceptable disturbance, is expanding. It advises local authorities to make provision for commercial development in their local plans, and gives greater encouragement to, and guidance on, development proposals for agricultural diversification.

We have no plans to review PPG7.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many public appointments he has made since 1 May. [14244]

Angela Eagle: The Secretary of State has made the following appointments to non-departmental public bodies and nationalised industries sponsored by the Department since 1 May.

	Number
NDPBs:
Executive	42
Advisory	30
Tribunals	59
Total	133

The Secretary of State also makes appointments to various small, mainly local, public bodies and other miscellaneous appointments. Details of these appointments are not held centrally.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14381]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster yesterday, 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 216.

Contaminated Land

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further legislative steps he plans in order to deal with radioactively contaminated land. [14360]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Act 1995 contained powers to establish regimes for both radioactively, and non-radioactively, contaminated land by secondary legislation. The Government are considering how best to apply the provisions of this Act, and we expect to make an announcement shortly.

Planning

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to require the obtaining of planning permission for the erection of all telephone and radio masts. [14012]

Mr. Raynsford: The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 grants a general planning permission for certain telecommunications masts providing:

- the mast is erected by a telecommunications code system operator licensed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under the Telecommunications Act 1984;
- the mast does not exceed 15m in height;
- the mast is not erected in a National Park, area of outstanding natural beauty, conservation area, or the Broads; and
- the mast is not refused prior approval by the local planning authority within the period allowed under the Order. The authority must be given the opportunity to say whether they wish to approve, within 28 days, details of the mast's siting and appearance. The authority may refuse approval if they consider there to be a serious threat to amenity.

A full application for planning permission is normally required for any mast which does not meet these criteria. There are no current plans to amend the regulations in this respect.

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans she has to change the current guidance, in Policy Planning Guidance and the Town and Country Planning Acts, in respect of their presumption in favour of development. [14358]

Mr. Raynsford: Section 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 requires a planning application to be determined in accordance with the adopted development plan unless material considerations indicate otherwise. As explained in PPG1, this establishes a presumption in favour of proposals that conform to the prevailing development plan, rather than a general presumption in favour of development. The Government have no plans to change this "plan-led" system. Any changes to Planning Policy Guidance or Minerals Planning Guidance will be announced in the normal way.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to include crime statistics as a material consideration in the determination of planning applications relating to change of use. [14176]

Mr. Raynsford: DoE Circular 5/94, "Planning Out Crime", advises that crime prevention is capable of being a material consideration when planning applications are considered. As with other material considerations, the weight that is given to it will depend on the individual circumstances of the case. Crime statistics may be useful in making this assessment.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to amend the Planning Regulations so that public houses and hot food takeaway premises do not fall within the same use class; and if he will make a statement. [14014]

Mr. Raynsford: The Use Classes Order 1987 groups together various types of land use because, in planning terms, they have a similar impact on a neighbourhood. As public houses and hot food takeaway premises tend to raise the same land use issues, they are both included within Use Class A3, the Food and Drink Class. There are no plans to amend this class, although we keep the arrangements under review.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to remove permitted development rights and same category use rights from the privatised utilities and public bodies for buildings or land which formerly had the benefit of Crown immunity, but have subsequently ceased to be used in full or part for the original purpose, and to require the submission of planning applications for any changes of use which have been implemented or planned since privatisation. [14032]

Mr. Raynsford: We have no plans to remove permitted development rights or same Use Class rights from privatised utilities or public bodies. Last year my Department commissioned research to establish the extent to which statutory undertakers rely on permitted development rights and to consider whether any changes are needed. The research project is now complete and we are considering the findings.

Driving Licences

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to change the licensing regulations for older motorists. [14203]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no plans at present to change the present arrangements. Those aged 70 and over may renew their driving licences for periods of up to three years subject to satisfying the health requirements. All drivers are under a statutory obligation to notify the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency of any relevant disability from which they suffer.

Road Schemes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the road schemes by each local authority which make up the existing commitments in the local transport settlement 1997–98, indicating for each (a) the total costs and (b) whether contracts have been entered into between local authorities and construction firms. [14195]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The schemes which are being supported in 1997–98 are listed in the table. Information on contracts could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Rural Transport

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) new and (b) existing rural packages which have been submitted by local authorities in their Transport Policies and Programmes for 1998–99 and the amount bid for in each. [14193]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The packages which are targeted substantially on rural areas are:

Air Safety

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further steps will be taken to review flight paths and container safety standards in respect of the transport of mixed oxide fuel by air. [14285]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am satisfied with current operational procedures which require that such flights should be made over water as far as possible, avoiding large conurbations.

Container safety standards for the transport of radioactive material are kept under continuous review by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and made mandatory for air transport when incorporated into the International Civil Aviation Organization's Technical Instructions for the Safe Transport of Dangerous Goods by Air. The UK will continue to contribute to future regulatory developments through both the IAEA and the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Local Authority Capital Receipts

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to relax the current controls on local authorities re-investing their non-housing capital receipts. [14027]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government Finance (Supplementary Credit Approvals) Act 1997, which has just come into force, will enable Ministers to take account of most receipts set aside by local authorities for debt repayment in determining amounts of supplementary credit approvals. The measure will allow the additional resources we have made available under our housing capital receipts initiative to be distributed to local authorities taking account of historically generated housing capital receipts, as well as need. The Government's immediate priority is for a housing initiative to get extra resources into tackling the backlog of housing need. We have no plans at present for a similar initiative for other services.

National Parks and Marine Reserves

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to establish new (a) national parks and (b) marine nature reserves; and if he will make a statement. [13684]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The designation of new National Parks in England is the responsibility of the Countryside Commission, subject to confirmation by the Secretary of State. The Countryside Commission proposes to bring together the results of current work on landscape designated areas next spring. Its report to Ministers will include advice on whether National Park status might be effective and appropriate for any areas where the landscape may be considered in need of greater protection.

There are no plans to establish any new Marine Nature Reserves in England.

The designation of National Parks and Marine Nature Reserves in Wales is a matter for the Secretary of State for Wales.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that the environmental protection measures in the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Act 1996 are adhered to. [14554]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London and Continental Railways are contractually obliged to the Government to comply with the Environmental Minimum Requirements provided for under the Channel Tunnel Rail Link development agreement. These include a range of planning, environmental and heritage memoranda and agreements with local authorities and statutory environmental bodies, and the various undertakings and assurances given during the passage of the CTRL Act.

Footpaths and Byways

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many miles of designated footpaths and byways exist in England and Wales. [14613]

Angela Eagle: In 1994, the last survey of rights of way in England indicated that there were 82,025 miles of footpaths and 1,864 miles of byways open to all traffic recorded under the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. A similar survey in Wales carried out in 1994–95 indicated that there were 19,441 miles of footpaths and 404 miles of byways.

In addition, there were also estimated to be 18,021 miles of bridleways in England and 3,440 miles in Wales, and 3,107 miles of roads used as public paths in England and 1,485 miles in Wales.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to assist the re-establishment of ancient bridleways. [14179]

Angela Eagle: Local authorities are responsible for recording bridleways and ensuring that they are open and free from obstructions. They also have powers to create bridleways by agreement or order. With our statutory advisers, the Countryside Commission, we shall encourage authorities to make good use of their powers. As part of the Government's comprehensive spending review, we shall be considering the balance of expenditure between different recreational activities.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will receive deputations from local authorities in England to discuss this year's provisional local authority grant settlement. [14617]

Ms Armstrong: I am keen to ensure that we hear the views of those authorities that have constructive points to make on the settlement, whether in writing, face to face or otherwise. I am currently looking into the possibility of using local video-conferencing facilities to meet with local authorities. This could save some local authority delegations from having to incur the expense and time that would be involved in travelling to London.

BSE

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidelines his Department issues to those handling tissue from the nervous system of cows infected with BSE; and if he will make a statement. [13805]

Angela Eagle: Occupational exposure to the agent BSE in nervous tissue may occur during work in research laboratories, post mortem rooms and during the slaughter and disposal of infected cattle. In view of the uncertainty about the risks from BSE, prudent and precautionary worker safety measures have been recommended since 1989. Guidance has been prepared on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission, the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens (ACDP).

Guidance from ACDP on the health and safety requirements for laboratory and post mortem workers was published in 1994. It recommends the use of special containment conditions, safety equipment and decontamination measures for all work with BSE. General ACDP guidance for other occupational groups was published in August 1996. It recommends the maintenance of high standards of occupational hygiene when working with cattle and new methods of working to avoid or minimise exposure to tissues of cattle that may carry the agent of BSE infectivity. Copies have been deposited in the House of Commons Library.

Recent evidence on the link between BSE and the new variant of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (nvCJD) in humans means that BSE must now be considered a biological agent (human pathogen) within the meaning of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations 1994. ACDP have advised that to date there is no evidence of occupational transmission of either BSE or CJD and that none of the cases of nvCJD has any obvious link with occupational exposure to BSE. ACDP consider that the existing published guidance on BSE continues to provide adequate control. The 1994 guidance is being revised and updated in any event and will be published early in 1998.

Passenger Railway Services

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Franchising Director plans to publish his criteria for the appraisal of passenger railway services. [14616]

Dr. Strang: The Franchising Director has today published "Appraisal of Support for Passenger Rail Services—Planning Criteria: An Interim Guide", which sets out the basis on which he intends to appraise the costs and benefits of new passenger rail investment and changes in service levels. I have approved these criteria on an interim basis, and instructed the Franchising Director to keep them under review, revising the criteria as necessary in the light of the wider review of economic appraisal being undertaken as part of the Government's integrated transport strategy. Copies of the criteria have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Genetically Modified Maize

Mr. Dewson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy in the European Council to support those member states of the European Community which have banned genetically modified maize. [14558]

Angela Eagle: At the Article 21 Committee on 5 November, Austria requested that the vote on the Commission proposal to require Austria and Luxembourg to repeal their bans on GM maize be postponed. The United Kingdom delegation, among others, supported the Austrian request, and consideration of the Commission's proposal has been deferred until the next meeting of the Article 21 Committee, in about two months time. In the meantime it is expected that the Commission will endeavour to find compromise wording for the proposal and the Government will consider its position in the light of these developments.

Franchising Director

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to issue new objectives, instructions and guidance to the Rail Franchising Director. [14614]

Dr Strang: I have today written to the Franchising Director, enclosing a new set of Objectives, Instructions and Guidance, issued to him under section 5 of the Railways Act 1993. Copies of my letter and of the Objectives, Instructions and Guidance have been laid before the House and also placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Coastguard

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on coastguard provision in the Solent/Spithead area. [14684]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Coastguard agency, Mr. C. J. Harris, to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Letter from Mr. C. J. Harris to Mr. Peter Viggers, dated 6 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Coastguard provision in the Solent/Spithead area.

The Coastguard District of Solent is part of the Southern Coastguard Search and Rescue Region, and comprises a Maritime Rescue Sub Centre at Lee-on-Solent along with Coastguard Sector Managers at Portsmouth, South Downs (Littlehampton), Southampton and the Isle of Wight who are responsible for Auxiliary Coastguard Response Teams trained in cliff and mud rescue and coastal search techniques. These teams are located at Havant, Hayling Island, Portsmouth, Selsey, Birling Gap, Brighton, Littlehampton, Newhaven, Shoreham, Hillhead, Lymington, Southampton, Bembridge, Needles, Newport, Ryde and Ventnor, plus two Coastguard patrol boats (based at Hayling Island and Southampton). Coastguard facilities within the Solent District are completed by a contract rescue helicopter based at Lee-on-Solent and other search and rescue organisations such as the Royal National Lifeboat Institution and Solent Sea Rescue Organisation.

Rail Regulation

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to improve the regulation of the rail industry. [14615]

Dr. Strang: I have today signed a voluntary Concordat with the independent Rail Regulator which provides a framework for better regulation of the railways. The Concordat includes a statement of the Government's objectives for the rail industry, the Rail Regulator's aims and objectives, and a framework for communication between Ministers, the Franchising Director and the Rail Regulator. Copies of the Concordat have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Service

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is to be the next Chief Inspector of Fire Services. [15140]

Mr. Straw: Mr. Graham Meldrum CBE, the Chief Fire Officer of the West Midlands Fire Service, will become Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services in succession to Sir Bryan Collins OBE, who retires on 31 December.

Surveillance Systems

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to alter the draft code of practice on intrusive surveillance to (a) ensure equal rights for tenants as for property owners and (b) include a definition of urgency; and if he will make a statement. [13710]

Mr. Michael: We have received more than 60 responses to the public consultation exercise on the draft code of practice. Both of the issues raised by the right hon. Member were raised by respondees and are receiving careful consideration, along with other matters raised during the consultation process. We will table a revised draft when that consideration has been completed.

Animals (Scientific Procedures)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to record the number of animals (a) bred and (b) killed purely for body parts and tissue use in UK laboratories; and if he will make a statement; [13800]

(2) what estimates he has made of the number of animals which have been (a) bred and (b) killed in UK laboratories purely for body parts and tissue use in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [13799]

Mr. George Howarth: The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 regulates the use of living animals in scientific procedures.

Killing animals by humane methods does not necessarily require licence authority under the Act and does not always need to be carried out in establishments designated under sections 6 or 7 of the 1986 Act. The Home Office cannot therefore collate, or even estimate, the number of animals bred and killed purely for body parts or tissue.

Fundamental changes to the Act would be needed if statistics of this nature were to be collected and there are no plans to make any such changes.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department plans to publish the revised (a) "Guidance on the Operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986" and (b) "Code of Practice for the Housing and Care of Animals Used in Scientific Procedures". [13643]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 4 November 1997]: Work has already commenced on updating the "Guidance on the Operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986". The revisions will, in part, depend upon exactly how we implement a number of the planned changes to the operation of the Act, including those recommended by the Animal Procedures Committee in its interim report on the review of the Act. A firm publication date cannot therefore be given at this stage.

Work on the "Code of Practice for the Housing and Care of Animals Used in Scientific Procedures" will follow the revision of the Guidance. This will allow us to ensure that any changes made take full account of changes being made in Europe. The Council of Europe is currently setting up working groups to review Appendix A of the European Convention for the Protection of Vertebrate Animals used for Experimental and other Scientific Purposes, ETS 123. This Appendix sets out guidelines on the care and accommodation of laboratory animals.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department has spent on funding the Home Office Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate in each of the last five years; what is the projected expenditure for each of the next two years; and if he will make a statement. [13638]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 4 November 1997]: In the last five years, (a) the pay budget and (b) the travel and subsistence budget for the Inspectorate have been as follows:

	(a) £	(b) £
1993–94	1,037,000	140,000
1994–95	1,031,000	102,000
1995–96	991,000	112,000
1996–97	1,047,000	129,000
1997–98	1,033,000	135,000

Budgets for 1998–99 and for 1999–2000 have not yet been finalised, but an increase to cover two or three new inspectors has been agreed.

Accommodation and other running costs are funded jointly with the administrative unit which operates the licensing system. They cannot easily be separated.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much has been spent by his Department on work to find alternatives to the use of animals in scientific procedures in each of the last five years; what is the projected expenditure for each of the next two years; and if he will make a statement; [13677]

(2) what assessment he has made of section 62 of the report of the Animal Procedures Committee for 1996; and if he will make a statement. [13681]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 4 November 1997]: During the past five years, the budget made available to the Animal Procedures Committee to sponsor research to reduce, refine or replace animal experimentation has been as follows:

1993–94: £308,000

1997–98: £182,000.

Paragraph 62 of the Committee's annual report repeats the Committee's concern about the reduction in the 1996–97 budget and says that the Committee was "extremely annoyed to find that the budget for 1997–98 would be reduced by another £60,000".

Both these reductions were made under the previous Government.

The budgets for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 have not yet been finalised, but I hope to see an increase.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) inspectors and (b) administrative staff are employed (i) full time and (ii) part time as part of the Home Office Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate. [13637]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 4 November 1997]: Since June, three new Inspectors have been appointed to restore the complement of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate to 18 full-time inspectors and one full-time personal secretary. We have secured additional funding from next year for another two or three inspectors.

In addition, there are 11 full-time and six part-time administrative staff in a separate unit which operates the licensing system.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the ban on the use of animals in the testing and development of weapons will come into force; and if he will make a statement. [13676]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 4 November 1997]: No animals are being used to develop weapons. Animals can be used, however, to test and develop means of protecting United Kingdom service men and women against terrorist and battlefield weapons and to improve treatments. I have no plans, at this time, to ban such use.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce compulsory training programmes for scientists and technicians killing animals by methods outlined in Schedule 1 to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. [13640]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 4 November 1997]: We have accepted a recommendation made by the Animal Procedures Committee in its interim report on the review of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 that all those killing animals by Schedule 1 methods should be trained and competent to do so.

We will be consulting the Institute of Biology, the Universities Group for the Accreditation of Training and other relevant bodies to develop a suitable training scheme. We then propose to add conditions to all Certificates of Designation to require establishments to maintain lists of all those who have been trained and are competent to kill animals by specified Schedule 1 methods.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to introduce compulsory training programme for certificate holders in respect of the specific responsibilities they hold under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; [13639]

(2) on what date he plans to meet certificate holders under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to discuss specific problems and best practice relating to the Act. [13641]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 4 November 1997]: In their interim report on the review of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, the Committee recommended that

"training be developed to assist Certificate holders in carrying out the specific responsibilities they hold under the 1986 Act" and that

"the Home Office arrange a meeting of certificate holders to consider specific problems and best practices".

We have accepted these recommendations.

The Animal Procedures Committee had previously recommended that all new applicants for Certificates of Designation should attend module 1 of an accredited training programme. This has already been implemented. We will now be consulting with the Institute of Biology, the Universities Group for the Accreditation of Training and other relevant bodies to develop additional training for Certificate holders.

No date has yet been set for a meeting of Certificate holders, but informal discussions have already been held with several Certificate holders at both Ministerial and official level.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Depar ent when his Department plans to publish the procedures by which infringements of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are handled; and if he will make a statement. [13642]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 4 November 1997]: These have already been published in paragraphs 135 to 140 and in Appendix D to the 1986 annual report of the Animal Procedures Committee.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has to ban the LD50 test; and if he will make a statement. [13675]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 4 November 1997]: Regulators, both national and international, still require that LD50 tests be carried out in certain circumstances to ensure that products are safe to the consumer and to those involved in their manufacture and transport. A unilateral ban on the LD50 test would, at this stage, result in these tests being carried out in other countries, many of which have less rigorous controls on animal tests and less regard for animal welfare. Even if it could be maintained under current legislation, such a ban would also seriously disadvantage United Kingdom industry.

The Government are instead pressing regulators to dispense with the need for the LD50 test.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the members of the Animal Procedures Committee who have held a licence under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 (a) during the last six years and (b) ever. [13680]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 4 November 1997]: Section 19(3) of the Act requires that, other than the Chairman, at least half of the members of the Animal Procedures Committee shall

"neither hold nor within the previous six years have held any licence" under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 or its predecessor, the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876.

The members of the Committee who currently hold or have held within the past six years either a project or personal licence under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are as follows:

Professor Ronald Anderson

Professor Barry Bridges

Professor Fiona Broughton Popkin

Professor Paul Flecknell

Mr. John Gregory

Professor Susan Iversen

Professor Michael Spyer.

In addition, Mrs. Judy MacArthur Clark and Dr. Anthony Suckling have held licences under the Act, but not during the last six years.

Two more members, Dr. Southee and Dr. Purchase, held licences before 1987 under the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876.

All members of the Committee are appointed because of their commitment to animal welfare. We intend to make a number of new appointments shortly and to increase the number of members with animal welfare expertise.

Racial Harassment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make racial harassment and violence a specific offence; and if he will make a statement. [14437]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government intend to introduce new offences of racial harassment and violence in the Crime and Disorder Bill. These measures will send out a strong message to society that such crime is unacceptable and will be dealt with seriously by the courts. A consultation document setting out in detail the Government's proposals was issued on 2 October. We are now considering the responses.

Strip Search Review

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 July 1997, Official Report, column 98, what is the target date for completion of the review of strip searching procedures. [13087]

Ms Quin: We expect the review to have been completed by the end of January 1998.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue guidance to the police, Crown Prosecution Service and other relevant professional groups on dealing with cases of alleged crimes against people with learning difficulties; and if he will make a statement. [13736]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The Government are concerned about the plight of vulnerable witnesses, including those with learning difficulties, and believe that more needs to be done.

That is why on 13 June I announced an urgent, wide-ranging review of the way in which vulnerable or intimidated witnesses are treated by the criminal justice system with the aim of identifying measures to protect those likely to be subject to intimidation and to assist them and other adult vulnerable witnesses give their best evidence in court. This is being taken forward by an interdepartmental working group which includes representatives from the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Crown Prosecution Service. The review will include consideration of the need to issue guidance to the police and others involved in the criminal justice system who may deal with cases of alleged crime against people with learning difficulties.

Work undertaken by the Crown Prosecution Service, headed by the Director of Public Prosecutions and under the superintendence of the Attorney-General, with the police has considered ways to improve information which assists with the early identification of vulnerable witnesses or victims or those who may have special requirements.

A new edition of the Manual of Guidance for the preparation of police files was published in October 1997. It advises officers on the information they should report to prosecutors concerning the special needs of certain witnesses and the additional measures required when they attend court.

Previous guidance relating to mentally vulnerable witnesses issued to Crown Prosecution Service staff in January 1995 draws attention to the fact that victims are often selected by offenders because of their vulnerability. This would be a public interest factor in favour of prosecution. The guidance also warns against assumptions being made about the capabilities of mentally vulnerable witnesses and their ability to give a reliable and complete account of events and urges decisions to be based on the known abilities of individuals.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Environmental Audit Committee

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Council (1) when she plans to establish the Commons Environmental Audit Committee; [14266]

(2) when she plans to move the establishment of the Environmental Audit Committee. [12720]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I will be tabling the motion to establish the Environmental Audit Committee very soon.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Exclusion Orders

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many exclusion orders remain in force; what number involve (a) republicans and (b) loyalists; and if she will make a statement on her policy regarding their use. [13019]

Mr. Ingram: No exclusion orders have been renewed or issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State since May, and none for which she is responsible is currently in force.

Preparatory Schools

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils attend preparatory departments at voluntary grammar schools; if these pupils are entitled to bus passes; what is the cost of these pupils to public funds; what are the estimated staff redundancy costs of the closure of these preparatory schools; what is the estimated additional cost to public funds of the transfer of these pupils to maintained and controlled primary schools; and if she will make a statement about the future of voluntary preparatory schools. [13648]

Mr. Worthington: At October 1996, enrolments in the preparatory departments of voluntary grammar schools were 2,193. Pupils in these preparatory departments are not eligible for transport assistance. In 1996–97 grant aid to the preparatory departments of voluntary grammar schools totalled £1,307,380. The Department of Education is presently seeking the views of relevant schools on the implications of reducing or terminating public funding to them. Until those consultations have been concluded it is not possible to forecast possible redundancy costs or the additional costs, if any, resulting from preparatory department pupils transferring to primary schools.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the suppliers to her Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13539]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 30 October 1997]: All Departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average time taken by her Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13955]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding reply 4 November 1997]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in reply to a similar question from my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 3 November 1997, Official Report, column 5.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the expenditure by (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if she will make a statement. [13271]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The information requested in respect of the Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Departments, their agencies and NDPBs for the years 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 is as follows:

	1995–96 £	1996–97 £	1997–98 £

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many RUC barracks are maintained in Northern Ireland; and if she will list those currently being planned, built, replaced, renovated, reinforced, upgraded or extended or to be closed. [13057]

Mr. Ingram: The RUC estate currently consists of 164 establishments. There is an on-going programme of maintenance, including work to comply with health and safety requirements.

Future requirements are currently being assessed against policing needs and availability of funding.

Border Crossings

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the blocked border crossings in Northern Ireland in September 1994 and September 1997, indicating anticipated changes in the next six months providing there is no major change in the overall security context. [13060]

Mr. Ingram: At the beginning of September 1994, 104 border crossing points were subject to closure orders which were all rescinded later that month and in October 1994 by the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. A list has been attached.

By September 1997 all were re-opened apart from three. Work is under way at BCP 171 Aghalane Bridge, Co. Fermanah, and is due to be completed by November 1998. There are currently no plans to re-open BCP 92 Annaghroe Bridge, Co. Tyrone or BCP 93 Knockaginny Bridge, Co. Tyrone.

North Belfast (26 September Disturbances)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she has received a report on disturbances in North Belfast involving members of the Paratroop Regiment on 26 September; and if she will make a statement. [13063]

Mr. Ingram: It has been reported that there have been allegations made about the behaviour of military personnel on the Oldpark Road in the early hours of Sunday 27 September. The allegations have not been the subject of a formal complaint. However, a full inquiry has been carried out which ascertained that there were no military vehicles in the area at the time alleged.

Security

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will consider introducing a greater level of transparency into the assessment of the security situation. [13061]

Mr. Ingram: Both the Chief Constable and Ministers regularly provide up-to-date assessments of the security situation which are as comprehensive as possible. Most recently members of the Select Committee on Northern Ireland visited Northern Ireland and were provided with a detailed up-to-date briefing on the current security situation. However, my hon. Friend will be aware that the nature of some information available to the Government and the security forces is of such a sensitive nature that it cannot be placed in the public domain.

Holding Centres

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals have been detained in each of the holding centres in each of the last six months, by (a) gender and (b) perceived religious/community origin. [13065]

Mr. Ingram: Set out below are details on the number of persons detained in each of the three holding centres in each month from April to September, categorised by gender. The religious/community origin of persons detained is not recorded.

Persons Detained in Holding Centres

April to September 1997

	Castlereagh		Gough		Strand Road		Total
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
April	43	4	9	—	3	—	55	4
May	21	1	9	—	—	—	30	1
June	42	3	5	1	5	1	52	5
July	23	1	3	—	2	1	28	2
August	23	1	20	—	2	—	45	1
September	18	3	11	1	1	—	30	4
Total	170	13	57	2	13	2	240	17

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what target date has been set for the conclusion of the consultation exercise on the recommendations made in the fourth annual report of the Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres. [13066]

Mr. Ingram: Following consultation with the relevant interested parties, the Secretary of State wrote to the Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres on 26 September 1997 in response to a number of the recommendations made in his fourth annual report. Some matters remain outstanding and when these have been resolved the Secretary of State will write again setting out the Government's full response. A copy of that letter, when it is issued, will be placed in the Library of the House.

Vehicle Checkpoints

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the location of permanent vehicle checkpoints in Northern Ireland in September 1994 and September 1997, indicating anticipated changes in the next six months providing there is no major change in the overall security context. [13059]

Mr. Ingram: The locations of permanent vehicle checkpoints in Northern Ireland in September 1994 and September 1997 are as follows:

As at September 1994	As at September 1997
Middletown	Removed
Cloghoge (Newry/Dublin Road)	Inactive but structure still present
Aughnacloy	Inactive but structure still present
Bessbrook X3	Reduced structures but still in use
Bessbrook High Street	Removed
Mahon Road, Portadown X2	Still in use
Letterkenny Road, Londonderry	Inactive but structure still present
Buncrana Road, Londonderry	Removed
Muff, Culmore Road, Londonderry	Inactive but structure still present
The Hump, Strabane	Inactive but structure still present
Clady	Removed
Rosscor Bridge	Inactive but structure still present
Wattle Bridge	Inactive but structure still present
Mullan Bridge	Inactive but structure still present
Gortmullan	Inactive but structure still present
Annaghmartin	Inactive but structure still present
Killyvilly	Inactive but structure still present
Clonatty Bridge	Inactive but structure still present
Kilturk	Removed
Donegall Pass, Belfast	Removed
Belfast International Airport	Inactive for a period, but returned to use following end of ceasefire

Since the ceasefire many of the permanent vehicle checkpoints are no longer used as checkpoints, however the structures are still manned—they fall into the category which reads "Inactive but structure still present".

In addition, the Civilian Search Unit manned vehicle checkpoints in Belfast at five locations—Royal Avenue, High Street, Queen Street, Donegall Place and Victoria Square. These were removed in September 1994.

All security measures, including permanent vehicle checkpoints are continually reviewed; any changes will depend on the assessment of threat at the time.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bus Companies

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to investigate developments in the bus industry as a result of mergers and take-overs of privatised former national bus companies and municipal bus undertakings; and if he will make a statement. [13705]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 30 October 1997]: Each merger qualifying for consideration under the Fair Trading Act 1973 is considered on its individual merits. The President of the Board of Trade has said that her general policy will be to make merger references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission primarily on competition grounds.

The Government are currently reviewing the provision and regulation of local bus services as part of the development of an integrated transport policy.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. McGrady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what agreements exist between her Department and BNFL relating to medium-term financial targets; when the most recent target was agreed; and if it assumed mixed oxide fuel would be manufactured by BNFL. [12949]

Mr. Battle: Three-year external financing limits are set for BNFL within the context of the annual corporate plan published by the company. BNFL's EFL for 1997–98 was adjusted from £–67,000,000 to £–169,000,000 to reflect an improved trading performance since the EFLs for three years 1997–98 to 1999–2000 were set in the 1996 Budget. The EFLs were set on the assumption that mixed oxide fuel would continue to be manufactured at Sellafield.

Ministerial Financial Interests

Mr. Lansley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the areas of departmental business from which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has excluded himself as a result of previous financial interests. [12585]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Ministers in this Government will continue to make public statements about their involvement in specific cases where it is valuable for the conduct of a specific case.

I knew on being appointed a Minister that a small shareholding in the companies detailed below were likely to be released from my late father's estate during summer 1997. For that reason I have stood aside from consideration of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on P and O/Stena, and papers relating to the European Commission's investigation under the European Community Merger Regulation of the proposed acquisition by Dupont of certain ICI businesses.

Business Links

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes there have been since 1 May to her Department's planned funding for Business Links (a) in the current year, (b) 1998 (c) 1999; what were the figures on 1 May; and what are the figures now. [13521]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 October 1997]: There have been no changes to the planned funding for Business Links in the current financial year; £38.1 million is available towards the cost of establishing the Business Link network and £102.8 million towards the cost of Business Link services.

As with all Government programmes, Business Link funding for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 is currently being considered as part of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the results of the latest survey of Business Links' levels of activity, including the number of small businesses using Business Links. [13520]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 October 1997]: A detailed report on Business Link management information is issued quarterly and a copy placed in the House of Commons Library. The report for the period from April to June 1997 will be published later this month.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the suppliers to her Department who have not been paid within the target period during the past year. [13525]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 30 October 1997]: All Departments are required to pay their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of goods or services or a valid invoice, whichever is the later, where no such terms exist. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Government will publish a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97 shortly.

Plutonium

Mr. McGrady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action will be taken to dispose of Britain's stockpile of civil plutonium. [14304]

Mr. Battle: Decisions on the utilisation of United Kingdom's civil plutonium stocks are for the owners of these stocks, including Magnox Electric, British Energy and BNFL's overseas customers, subject to meeting the necessary physical protection and safeguards requirements. There is no quick and easy way to dispose of the United Kingdom's stocks of civil plutonium. One option is to use some of this plutonium to fabricate mixed oxide fuel to burn in civil nuclear reactors to generate electricity.

The United Kingdom attaches great importance to ensuring that rigorous arrangements are in place to protect against the risk of theft, sabotage or diversion of any of its plutonium stocks. These stocks are kept under the close scrutiny of the EURATOM Safeguards Office and International Atomic Energy Agency.

Bangladesh

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the level of trade between Britain and Bangladesh in the last year for which figures are available. [14253]

Mrs. Roche: In 1996, trade in goods between Britain and Bangladesh was worth £351 million, 9 per cent. higher than a year earlier. The value of UK exports of goods fell by 20 per cent. to £72 million while UK imports rose by 21 per cent. to £280 million. Information on trade in services with Bangladesh is not available.

THORP Nuclear Plant

Mr. McGrady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent reports she has received from British Nuclear Fuels plc concerning how the THORP plant will operate. [14361]

Mr. Battle: My Department maintains regular contact with BNFL on a wide range of issues. Since THORP began operations in March 1994 some 680 tonnes of fuel had been sheared and dissolved to the end of March 1997. I understand that THORP is planned to reprocess 7,000 tonnes of spent fuel in the first 10 years of operation.

Independent Research and Technology Institutions

Dr. Cable: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made since July in respect of the tax exempt status of those independent research and technology institutions which she is currently reviewing; and if she plans to amend the guidelines for exemption. [14399]

Mr. Battle: I am still considering the responses to my Department's recent consultation exercise on draft revised guidelines for applicants and will make an announcement in due course.

Mersey Dock and Harbour Company

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received concerning the industrial dispute at the Mersey Dock and Harbour Company; and if she will make a statement. [13991]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 4 November 1997]: My Department has received representations about this dispute from trade union organisations, members of the public and the dockers, their representatives and supporters.

The Government's position is that industrial disputes are matters for the parties concerned, with assistance of the independent Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service where both sides agree. It is not for the Government to intervene.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which she is responsible; if she will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–2000; and if she will make a statement. [13583]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The estimated cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in the core DTI is £2.7 million.

Expenditure incurred and planned is as follows:

(i) To date	266,000
(ii) 1997–98	1,353,000
(iii) 1998–99	1,090,000
(iv) 1999–2000	259,000

These sums will be found from within existing and planned PES provision. Executive Agencies and other public sector bodies with which DTI is associated are finalising their own cost forecasts.

Trading Standards

Helen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she intends to review the current law in respect of the use of minors by trading standards officers to make test purchases of items which should not legally be sold to them; and if she will make a statement. [14317]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 5 November 1997]: Since local authorities, for which trading standards officers work, already have the necessary powers to make test purchases and use minors where appropriate, I have no plans at present to review the current legislation for which I am responsible in this respect. However, I am aware by virtue of my participation in the Ministerial Group on Alcopops that my colleagues at the Home Office are working towards clarifying the law on the use of children in relation to test purchases of alcohol.

Small Business

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the Government-sponsored organisations which provide (a) grant information and (b) grants to small businesses. [14619]

Mrs. Roche: Details of grants for small firms are contained in the DTI publication "A guide to sources of help for small firms". In addition, there are local sources of financial help. Small businesses seeking grants and advice about grants should contact their local Business Link. Grants and advice may also be available from Training and Enterprise Councils, Local Enterprise Companies in Scotland, LEDU in Northern Ireland, Local Enterprise Agencies, Local Authorities and Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Energy Council

Mr. Healey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the outcome of the Energy Council meeting on 27 October. [15189]

Mr. Battle: The Council considered an amended proposal for a European Parliament and Council Directive concerning common rules for the internal market in natural gas.

The Council discussed the mechanisms to be included in the Directive for opening up natural gas markets to competition on an incremental basis. It also considered the procedures and criteria for the granting of possible derogations from the Directive in respect of financial problems which might arise in a competitive market from the long-term contractual commitments of gas companies. In addition, it discussed a number of other issues relating to the Directive, including the treatment of emergent regions and upstream pipelines, the unbundling of company accounts, the authorisation of distribution and arrangements for access to downstream gas grids.

The Council noted the substantial progress made to date in the negotiations and confirmed its political willingness to reach a common position on the Gas Directive at the next Energy Council on 8 December 1997.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she plans to publish the fourth report of the Chief Child Support Officer; and if she will make a statement. [15187]

Ms Harman: I am today publishing the Annual Report of the Chief Child Support Officer for the year 1996–97. This report records the outcome of the monitoring of decision making in the Child Support Agency during 1996–97 by the Chief Child Support Officer, who reports to me on standards of adjudication. The Report indicates that there is still cause for concern, but that progress has been made. Twenty-two per cent. of decisions monitored had resulted in a child support liability that was wrong in cash terms but more than half had been decided in a way that did not meet all the requirements of the legislation. In his foreword, the Chief Child Support Officer comments on "continuing improvement but with some way to go before standards are acceptable widely".

While we are aware that much still needs to be done, we acknowledge the progress which this Report reflects. All children have the right to the care and support of both their parents wherever they may live. Child support tackles child poverty and can also offer lone mothers the opportunity to provide for themselves and their children by working, rather than relying on benefits. The effective operation of the child support scheme is essential to ensure these rights and provide these opportunities.

I expect to see continuing progress both as the result of continued efforts by Child Support Agency staff and, in due course, as the provisions in the Social Security Bill are implemented. However, we will be looking closely at the operation of the Child Support Agency in the coming months to ensure that it provides an efficient and effective service to all its clients.

Lone Parents

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the four schemes operated in the voluntary sector outlined in the New Deal for Lone Parents—October 1997 report, with special reference to (a) the funding which the Department of Social Security will make available to those schemes and (b) the ways in which these schemes will interact with the New Deal for Lone Parents scheme. [14681]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Beta 2000, Instant Muscle, the Sandwell Afro Caribbean Development Agency and, jointly, Gingerbread and Training For Life have been contracted to set up and run innovative schemes to help lone parents on Income Support to take up work. Payments are made to contractors on a monthly basis, dependent on satisfactory performance, with additional amounts payable in respect of each lone parent helped into work. Precise payment details are commercial in confidence. The areas in which these contractors are operating do not overlap with areas covered by the first phase of the New Deal for Lone Parents.

In addition to the four schemes being operated by the organisations listed above, the National Council for One Parent Families were contracted to produce a guide for employers which presents the business case for employing lone parents. This guide is being distributed throughout the country initially through the Opportunity 2000 network and can also be obtained by contacting a national helpline.

All of the contracts concerned were set up in the context of testing different approaches to helping lone parents into work over a three year period. Contracts were initially issued for one year and decisions on their renewal will be made in the context of the national implementation of the New Deal for Lone Parents from October next year. Any lessons learned from the evaluation of both the first phase of the New Deal for Lone Parents and the voluntary sector innovative schemes will inform the design of the national programme.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to address the shortfall between the amount paid in housing benefit in respect of mortgage interest payments and the amount charged by building societies at variable interest rates. [14670]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We have no current plans for shadowing actual interest rates charged to individual borrowers on benefit.

Mortgages

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of mortgages are covered by those lenders on whose interest rates the standard interest rate for unemployed homebuyers is calculated. [14556]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested.

The standard interest rate is based on an average of approxiately 30 of the largest Building Societies. Currently 25 per cent. of mortgages for home purchase, by value, are covered by all Building Societies.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date the entitlement of disability living allowance for Peter Walsh, N.I. No. WM 00 36 58C was disallowed; when the request for a review was made; at what stage a consultant's report was requested; and when the review will be determined. [14277]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. We need to focus on those who are properly entitled to benefit.

This is why we have set up the Benefit Integrity Project. The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 5 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning Mr Walsh and his entitlement to Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

The Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) was set up in response to the recent Benefit Review of DLA. Over the next two years, specially trained staff will make enquiries by postal questionnaire or home visit in around 425,000 cases to establish whether DLA is being paid correctly. Mr Walsh was contacted through the enquiry work of the BIP.

Following receipt of a completed BIP questionnaire from Mr Walsh and based on the information he provided, Mr Walsh was disallowed DLA from 14 August 1997. A review of this decision was requested on 24 September 1997. After full consideration by an Adjudication Officer, further information was sought in the form of a Consultant's report on 22 October 1997. A decision will be made on Mr Walsh's entitlement on receipt of this report. The Agency aims to complete 60% of review decisions within 55 working days, and 80% within 75 working days.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

War Pensions

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many personnel in civilian capacities have been awarded war disablement pensions through service in the Gulf war; and to which units they were attached. [13509]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is that delivery of service should be simpler and more efficient. Queries on operational matters concerning the War Pensions Agency are for its Chief Executive, Mr. Kevin Caldwell. I have asked him to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Letter from K. C. Caldwell to Mr. Michael Hancock, dated 5 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how many personnel in civilian capacities have been awarded War Disablement Pension through service in the Gulf War and to which units they were attached.

No awards of War Pension have been made in respect of service by civilians in the Gulf War.

The only provision for civilians in the War Pensions arena is The Personal Injuries (Civilians) Scheme. This Scheme was introduced at the outbreak of World War II under the Personal Injuries (Emergency Provisions) Act 1939 to provide for civilians who were disabled by war injuries sustained as a result of enemy action during World War II. The Scheme does not cover injuries sustained in any other conflicts.

Personnel employed in a civilian capacity who do not satisfy these provisions, and who wish to claim compensation for disablement due to their employment, should approach their employers direct.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

SCOTLAND

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12571]

Mr. Dewar: My Department is responsible for the following functions in relation to payment for goods and services:

confirming the receipt of goods and services (done locally);

checking the supplier's invoice (done locally);

authorising payment (done locally by someone other than the person who ordered the goods and checked the supplier's invoice);

Keying payment instructions into the main accounting system (done locally or centrally depending on specific arrangements). In a number of instances involving large numbers of individual payments, paying authorising information is supplied to the accounting system by separate systems which manage the individual schemes (though these tend to be for grant and similar schemes (e.g., student awards) rather than the supply of goods and services); issuing payment (done centrally, and may be by BACS or by payable order).

Payment processing is carried out on my Department's accounting system which utilises cfacs, a package designed by Cedardata plc and supplied to my Department under a contract with International Computers Ltd.

No sub-contractors are involved in making payments for goods and services.

Apart from two executive agencies and one of the associated departments, all Scottish Office and associated departments, including their respective executive agencies, share this one accounting and payments system.

It is not possible to isolate the costs of setting up and maintaining those parts of the Department's accounting system which deal with payments (which in any event are for a wider range of activities than purchasing goods and services) from the costs of setting up and maintaining the system as a whole. In 1997–98 the sums paid to suppliers in connection with the operation of the accounting system as a whole will be £230,764. The cost, in 1997–98, of employing those staff whose duties related solely to the making of payments was £239,262. Nor is it possible, except at disproportionate cost, to calculate the cost of the time incurred by staff for whom the making of payments is only one of many duties.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost of external consultancies associated with the specification of the proposed PFI contract at the Western General hospital trust, Edinburgh, and from which budgets these costs were met; what was the estimated cost of the proposed contract at the time the decision was taken not to proceed with the contract; and what is the estimated cost of the publicly financed development at the Western general hospital Edinburgh announced on 23 June. [12750]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The Western General Hospital NHS Trust incurred around £1.6 million in fees for design, financial and legal advice in connection with the proposed PFI project. The costs were met by the trust from its own resources including non-recurring revenue grants from the Scottish Office. Much of the expenditure incurred would be required under both PFI and publicly funded routes.

In June, the estimated capital value of the PFI project was £70 million. The estimated cost of the smaller publicly funded development is £40 million excluding VAT.

Prisoner Transfers

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what role Ministers of the Northern Ireland Office undertook in relation to the application by convicted prisoner Jason Campbell for the transfer from HM prison Shotts, within the Scottish system, to the Maze prison in Northern Ireland; [13422]

(2) when he was first made aware of the approval of the application to transfer convicted prisoner Jason Campbell from HM prison Shotts, within the Scottish system, to the Maze prison in Northern Ireland; [13417]

(3) on what dates (a) he and (b) the Minister for Home Affairs and Devolution, were first made aware of the application to transfer convicted prisoner Jason Campbell from HM prison Shotts, within the Scottish system, to the Maze prison in Northern Ireland; and by whom; [13421]

(4) when the Minister of State at the Scottish Office responsible for Home Affairs authorised or consented to the transfer of convicted prisoner Jason Campbell from HM prison Shotts, within the Scottish system, to the Maze prison in Northern Ireland. [13414]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 30 October 1997]: Northern Ireland Ministers received confirmation on 25 September that Jason Campbell had applied for a transfer. The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland contacted the Minister of State at The Scottish Office, also on 25 September, with a request that the application be dealt with promptly. The Minister of State passed that request on to the Scottish Prison Service. He was told on 4 October that an offer of transfer had been approved. I was first made aware of the application, and the fact that it had been approved, on 5 October.

Ministers have since reviewed the relevant procedures and will in future be notified at an early stage of any applications for transfer between jurisdictions.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps were taken by Scottish Office Ministers to ascertain whether in the case of the application by convicted prisoner Jason Campbell for transfer from HM prison Shotts, within the Scottish system, to the Maze prison in Northern Ireland the criteria for such a transfer were genuinely met; [13418]

(2) on what specific grounds and in relation to which particular criteria he reversed the decision to authorise the transfer of convicted prisoner Jason Campbell from HM prison Shotts, within the Scottish system, to the Maze prison in Northern Ireland. [13415]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 30 October 1997]: Investigations showed that Jason Campbell had provided false information on his application form, and I made it clear in my statement of 10 October that the transfer should not have been approved.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) under what statutory provision or regulation the original approval of a transfer for the convicted prisoner Jason Campbell from HM prison Shotts, within the Scottish system, to Maze prison in Northern Ireland was given; and at whose immediate request; [13420]

(2) which Minister or official of the Scottish office first authorised the transfer of the convicted prisoner Jason Campbell from HM prison Shotts, within the Scottish system, to the Maze prison in Northern Ireland; and on what date. [13419]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 30 October 1997]: The original application for transfer under the Criminal Justice Act 1961 was approved by the Scottish Prison Service under the delegated authority of the Secretary of State on 25 September 1997.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what applications for transfer of convicted prisoners from the Scottish prisons system to the Northern Ireland prisons system are currently under consideration. [13423]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 30 October 1997]: As of 4 November, applications from 3 prisoners have been submitted to the Scottish Prison Service for transfer to Northern Ireland and these will be considered on their merits.

Political Prisoners

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances a prisoner within the Scottish prison system may be described as political. [13416]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 30 October 1997]: There are no circumstances in which a prisoner within the Scottish prison system would be described as political.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14387]

Mr. Dewar: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 216.

Prison Service Recruitment

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Scottish Prison Service recruitment policy. [15188]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Prison Service manages its recruitment in accordance with the Civil Service Commissioners Recruitment Code. This ensures that recruitment is carried out on the basis of fair and open competition and selection on merit. The recruitment arrangements in place are subject to internal management checks and were audited by the Civil Service Commissioners in 1996.

Details of the recruitment carried out in 1996–97 including the use of permitted exceptions to the principles of open and fair competition are contained in the Scottish Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts for 1996–97, a copy of which is in the Library.

WALES

Public Transport

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many passenger miles were travelled by people on public transport in Wales in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [14077]

Mr. Hain: The National Travel Survey is the only source of comprehensive information on journeys by public transport. It provides information for Welsh residents rather than for journeys within Wales. The sample is insufficient to give reliable figures for individual years but the average annual mileage travelled by Welsh residents on public transport is estimated at 1.5 billion miles over the three-year period 1991 to 1993 and 1.2 billion miles for 1994 to 1996.

The annual inquiry of Public Service Vehicle operators provides information on local bus and coach journeys within Wales, with an estimated 0.5 billion passenger miles per year since 1992.

Farming

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration is currently being given to an application for European funds to offset the effects of Green Pound price fluctuations on agricultural prices and subsidies; and if he will make a statement. [14165]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Paying the aid would have significant implications for UK public expenditure. We are keeping the case of payment under review, but on the evidence currently available have concluded that the case for payment is at present not proven.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received in the past six months on the subject of Green Pound fluctuations in respect of the value of subsidies received by Welsh farmers; and if he will make a statement. [14078]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Department has received written representations from the two farming unions in Wales and seven others on the impact of Green Pound fluctuations on agriculture. Ministers and officials have also received delegations from farming and farm-related organisations on several occasions.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he last met representatives of the National Farmers' Union in Wales to discuss current farming issues; and if he will make a statement; [14080]

(2) how many representations he has received on the review of hill livestock compensatory allowance; and if he will make a statement. [14084]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend and I have received seven representations from industry bodies and Members of Parliament concerning the 1997 Autumn Review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands. My right hon. Friend and I also recently met, separately, representatives of the National Farmers' Union of Wales and the Farmers' Union of Wales as part of the Review in Wales to discuss the level of rates for the 1998 Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance scheme year. We are now considering, with Ministers from all the Agriculture Departments, the representations we have received before making final decisions on rate levels for 1998.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14389]

Mr. Ron Davies: A full list of statutory instruments laid before the House, whether under the affirmative or the negative procedure during the summer adjournment, is contained int he House of Commons "Votes and Proceedings" dated Monday 27 October 1997, which has been publicly available since Tuesday 28 October 1997.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Student Loans

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to extend access to student loans for part-time students in higher education; and if he will make a statement. [13170]

Dr. Howells: The Government agrees with the Dearing Committee's conclusion that in the light of other requirements for additional funding in higher education, and the fact that many part-time students have access to other resources, extending loans to part-time students should not be a priority. The Committee looked at other ways of securing equity for part-time students, and we are considering its recommendations. In this context, we have already announced that we shall be making funds available for the remission of fees for part-time students who have lost their jobs. We have also indicated that part-time students will benefit from support from increased access funds.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to extend eligibility for supplementary hardship loans to part-time students in higher education from 1998–99; and what estimate he has made of the cost. [14433]

Dr. Howells: The Government has no plans to extend eligibility for supplementary loans, but in line with the Dearing Committee's recommendations is considering other ways of supporting part-time students who experience financial hardship. We have already announced that we shall be making funds available for the remission of fees for part-time students who have lost their jobs. We have also indicated that part-time students will benefit from support from increased access funds.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what age considerations will be taken into account in decisions on eligibility for student loans in higher education from 1998–99. [14432]

Dr. Howells: In the 1998–99 academic year, students who are aged 50 or over when their courses begin will not be eligible for student loans, but will be entitled to fee support and maintenance grants on the same basis as other students. We are reviewing the eligibility criteria, including those relating to age, which will apply to student loans in 1999–2000 and beyond.

Employment Zones

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made on introducing prototype employment zones; and if he will make a statement. [14422]

Mr. Alan Howarth: On 15 September we published a prospectus and invited eight areas to bid to become prototype Employment Zones. All eight areas submitted outline bids on 6 October which were very encouraging. Final bids are due on 17 November and we expect to announce the successful partnerships in early December with the prototype Employment Zones starting in February 1998.

New Deal

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice his Department has given to the Employment Service on the minimum weekly wage that should be payable to 18 to 25-year-olds offered employment under the New Deal. [14428]

Mr. Andrew Smith: This Department's policy is set out in the Design of the New Deal for 18–24-year-olds which states that:

> "Employers [will] not make a direct cash profit from the subsidy, but that the New Deal employee [will cost] them in wages at least as much as they receive in subsidy. It is expected that the New Deal employees will receive the normal rate paid to comparable employees of the company".

A copy of the Design of the New Deal for 18–24-year-olds has been placed in the Library.

Office for Standards in Education

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the total costs of the Office for Standards in Education since being established and (b) the annual costs. [14363]

Mr. Byers: The total cost of Ofsted from April 1993 to March 1997 was £313 million. The costs from September 1992 to March 1993 were within the budget of the Department of Education and were not separately identified.

Annual costs are as follows:

	£ million
1993–94	46
1994–95	63
1995–96	82
1996–97	122
1997–98 (forecast)	151

Students (Fees)

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to exempt unemployed students on part-time higher education courses from tuition fees from 1998–99; and what estimate he has made of the cost. [14431]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State plans to make funds available from 1998–99 to the Higher Education Funding Council for England to enable universities and colleges in England to remit fees for part-time students in higher education who have lost their jobs. Some £2 million will be available for this purpose in 1998–99. Further information will be issued in due course.

Adult Education

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about his plans for adult vocational postgraduate education in the United Kingdom in colleges of education. [13108]

Dr. Howells: The Report of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education chaired by Sir Ron Dearing, published on 23 July, recommended that more sub-degree provision should take place in FE colleges and that there should be no growth in degree level qualifications offered by FE colleges. The consultation on the report's recommendations ended in early October and we are still considering the responses. We will respond to this and other Dearing Report recommendations in due course.

Recruitment (Non-EU Residents)

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements exist in respect of visas, work permits and length of allowable stay to encourage the recruitment of non-European Union residents with special qualifications and expertise in areas where (a) the United Kingdom and (b) EU states have shortfalls. [13112]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The work permit arrangements are designed to allow UK employers to fill posts requiring high level qualifications, senior level responsibilities, or rare technical skills for which no suitably qualified resident labour is available.

These arrangements are continuously reviewed to take account of changes in the UK labour market. Other EU Member States generally have their own, broadly similar, systems.

Work permits are approved for periods up to a maximum of four years. The period of approval depends on the skills and experience required and the length of time the need is expected to continue.

Visas are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will produce copies of the report "Excellence for Children—Meeting Special Educational Needs" in a video format for British Sign Language users. [14594]

Ms Estelle Morris: It is impractical to produce the SEN Green Paper in video format. I hope that, in consulting on the Green Paper, organisations representing hearing-impaired people will take into account the views of those who are unable to access the printed document.

Foreign Students

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students who did not hold a British passport enrolled at United Kingdom universities from (a) other EU countries and (b) south-east Asia for each of the last five years; and what are the projected enrolment figures for (i) the current academic year and (ii) the next two academic years. [14695]

Dr. Howells: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Teachers (Redundancy)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers others than those in further or higher education or independent schools (a) were made redundant and (b) did not have their contracts renewed for each month from September 1996 to September 1997. [14694]

Mr. Byers: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

University Applications

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of university applications for 1997–98 and the levels of parental income of applicants compared to previous years; and if he will make a statement. [14559]

Dr. Howells: I will write to the hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Retired Teachers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 819, what proportion of teachers, other than those in further or higher education or independent schools, who retired under the age of 60 years in the period October 1996 to September 1997 retired (a) on the grounds of (i) ill-health, (ii) efficiency or (iii) redundancy and (b) aged (1) under 30, (2) 30 to 34, (3) 35 to 39, (4) 40 to 44, (5) 45 to 49, (6) 50 to 54 and (7) 55 to 59 years. [14702]

Mr. Byers: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Higher Education

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the annual cost of returning to the full grant system for higher education. [14562]

Dr. Howells: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Trade Union Membership

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of the work force are members of trades unions in each member state of the European Union. [14504]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have been asked to reply.

The following table contains the information sought:

Denmark	80

Notes:

All figures for 1995, the most recent consistently available, bar Belgium (1994) and Ireland (1990). Figures for Luxembourg are unavailable. Union density is union members as a proportion of wage and salary earners. Figures are compiled in a variety of different ways across member states and are not strictly comparable in all cases.

[1] Evaluation is taken to mean the periodic review of the Agency, which involves a performance evaluation, the re-visiting of the Prior Options process, and the re-issue of the Framework Document. Initial Policy was this should take place at not more than 3 year intervals, but this was later extended to 5 years, with some specified exceptions. As the process takes a period of some months, only the year in which the review is expected to take place is given. Where the first review is described as "ongoing" the second review would normally be expected to take place 5 years after the re-issue of the Framework Document.

[2] The Date and column at which the Key Targets for FY1997–98 were published in the Official Report. For the sake of clarity and completeness this information has been included for all the Department's Agencies, although the hon. Member's questions did not ask this in all cases.

[3] The 1997–98 Key Targets for these five Agencies have not yet been published in the Official Report.

[4] Formerly Army Individual Training Organisation.

[5] Date of Launch as a Trading Fund; all were previously Agencies.

Development Sites

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the value of the development sites proposed for disposal by the Ministry of Defence, including the housing units; and when he expects the sales to be made. [13911]

Mr. Spellar: Based on the number of sites which are in disposal or are currently planned to become surplus, we estimate that disposal receipts for land and buildings will total some £140 million in 1997–98, £125 million in 1998–99 and £70 million in 1999–2000.

Housing units for disposals within the Annington Homes portfolio are released to that company within the provisions of the contract of sale.

CS Gas

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the report produced by the chemical and biological defence establishment, Porton Down, on the study of the medical effects of the CS gas solvent methyl isobutyl ketone conducted in 1996 at the request of the Police Scientific Development Branch. [14305]

Mr. Spellar: In 1996 the Chemical and Biological Defence (CBD) Sector of DERA at Porton Down was contracted by the Police Scientific Development Branch of the Home Office to conduct a study of the medical effects of the CS gas solvent methyl isobutyl ketone. This report is the property of the Home Office as the contracting authority.

However CBD in consultation with the Police Scientific Development Branch will make arrangements to place a copy of this 1996 report in the Library of each House.

Contingency Operational and Procurement Exhibition

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what support his Department and DESO are providing for UK companies to attend COPEX Jordan 1998, COPEX USA May 1998 and COPEX USA (San Diego) October 1998. [14365]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence does not subsidise or play any part in the organisation of these exhibitions. The MOD Defence Export Services Organisation, DESO, does, on occasion, inform UK companies about such exhibitions and may advise UK exhibitors.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what MOD land will be made available for the 1998 Contingency Operational and Procurement Exhibition. [14367]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence has not been approached by the organisers of the 1998 Contingency and Operational Procurement Exhibition.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14378]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster yesterday, 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 216.

Porton Down

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature of the work which is being carried out jointly between the chemical and biological defence establishment, Porton Down, and Cortecs International; what is the purpose of this work; when did this work begin; when is this work expected to end; and what assessment he has made of the value of the work. [14307]

Mr. Spellar: The aim of the work being carried out jointly between the Chemical and Biological Defence (CBD) sector of DERA at Porton Down and Cortecs International is to investigate new technologies which will facilitate the future development of oral vaccines. The collaboration began in June 1996 with the preliminary phase completed in October 1997.

The benefit is mutual. It allows CBD to exploit Cortecs expertise in creating oral drugs, and has given Cortecs access to CBD research on vaccines. The joint project will contribute to the development of vaccines to meet both Ministry of Defence and public health requirements.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [13265]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 5 November 1997]: Spending on tax consultants and other external tax advice was as follows:

(£ pounds)

	Ministry of Defence (excluding agencies)	Defence agencies	NDPBs
1995–96	—	27,450	1,175
1996–97	5,500	35,790	1,175
1997–98 (to date)	—	8,130	90
The following expenditure is anticipated
1997–98	4,500	—	1,085

These figures exclude tax advice obtained by defence contractors and as part of wider consultancies, which could not be extracted without disproportionate cost.

"Defence Agencies" includes all spending by the Ships Support Agency which became an Agency on 11 December 1996.

Mine Information and Training Centre

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Mine Information and Training Centre will be set up; how many staff it will have; and what its budget will be. [14479]

Dr. Reid: The Mine Information and Training Centre will become fully operational on 1 January 1998. Its establishment will become fully operational on 1 January 1998. Its establishment will be one captain, one warrant officer and one senior non-commissioned officer and it will have an annual budget of £125,000.

Harrier Accident (Wittering)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence it he will make a statement on the accident occurring on 31 October involving a Harrier jet at RAF Wittering, indicating the level of hazard caused by the plane's cargo. [14601]

Mr. Spellar: The only stores being carried by the aircraft at the time of the accident was a training missile, the seeker head of which had a coating containing a tiny amount of mercury thallium. As the component was destroyed on impact, the mercury thallium would have completely dissipated within about 10 seconds and, as a result, would have posed no hazard. This has subsequently been confirmed during the environmental health monitoring tests routinely carried out at aircraft crash sites.

RAF Signals Engineering Establishment

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment for 1997–98. [15141]

Dr. Reid: The Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment Agency's Key Targets for the financial year 1997–98 are:

KT 2: Maintain 100 per cent. of core skills to support likely operations.

Performance strategy

KT 3: Deliver 100 per cent. of operational tasks to time.

KT 4: Develop Customer Supplier Agreements with principal customers and Lodger Units by 31 March 1998.

KT 11: Complete commissioning of the Future Business System (FBS) initiative by 1 April 1998.

Defence Codification Agency

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Codification Agency for 1997–98. [15142]

Dr. Reid: The Defence Codification Agency's (DCA) Key Targets for the financial year 1997–98 are:

KT 1: Complete an annual policy review by 30 September of each year.

KT 2: Examine 50,000 items per year to identify duplicate NATO stock numbers and report the duplicates to the relevant Design Authority.

KT 3: Extend DCA's file purification service to the Army by 30 April 1998.

KT 5: Reduce the unit cost of codification to less than £56 by 31 March 1998 (£51 by 31 March 1999, £48 by 31 March 2000, £46 by 31 March 2001 and £44 by 31 March 2002).

KT 6: Reduce the Agency's Running Costs by 5.8 per cent. by 31 March 1998 (10 per cent. by 31 March 1999, 2 per cent. by 31 March 2000, 2 per cent. by 31 March 2001 and a further 2 per cent. by March 2002).

KT 7: Reduce the number of post codification queries to 13,000 in 1997–98, 12,000 in 1998–99, 11,000 in 1999–2000, 10,000 in 2000–01 and 9,000 in 2001–02.

KT 8: To develop and encourage DCA personnel to realise their full potential through the 100 per cent. application of Investors in People (IIP) standards and practices.

KT 9: TO provide effective leadership and to promote morale.

Surveillance Towers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of British Army surveillance towers in Northern Ireland in September 1994 and September 1997; how may of these are on civilian property; what plans exist to withdraw some of these from use in the next six months; and if he will estimate the total annual cost of staffing and maintaining such installations in the past 12 months. [13058]

Dr. Reid: In September 1994 there were surveillance towers at 10 hilltop sites in the South Armagh areas, two towers in Londonderry and three surveillance posts mounted on blocks of flats within Belfast. In September 1997 there were the same number of sites in South Armagh and Belfast, but only one in Londonderry, the other having been closed in 1995. In addition to surveillance towers, the security forces maintain a number of other structures which are used for a variety of observation purposes.

All the sites are on land either leased or requisitioned from civilians, civilian organisations or other Government agencies.

The security situation is kept under constant review and the configuration of the military infrastructure adjusted accordingly. However, there are no plans to withdraw any of the towers from use over the next six months.

The annual costs of staffing and maintaining these installations are not held centrally and could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

Civilian Complaints

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian complaints were made against each regiment of the British Army during the past three years; and how many of these led to disciplinary action. [13062]

Dr. Reid: Figures for complaints against the Army outside Northern Ireland are not recorded centrally. So far as the Army in Northern Ireland is concerned complaints are categorised as criminal or non-criminal. During the past three years the Royal Ulster Constabulary received the following number of criminal complaints:

Criminal complaints

Year	Total
1995	28
1996	32

[1] Figures up to 31 October 1997.

A breakdown by regiment is not available. As regards non-criminal complaints the Independent Assessor of Military Complaints Procedures in Northern Ireland recommended in 1994 that these should be informally resolved at local level wherever possible. In the past three years the numbers of non-criminal complaints dealt with in this way were as follows:

Informal non-criminal complaints

Year	Total
1995	41
1996	264

[1] Figures up to 30 September 1997.

Once again a breakdown by regiment is not available. Where informal resolution is not possible or appropriate, complaints are investigated more formally. The numbers of formal non-criminal complaints, by regiment, in the past three years are set out in the table.

Military Forces, Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of part-time members of the RIR banded by salary levels in increments of £5,000 per annum and indicate the average number of hours per week in each band. [13081]

Dr. Reid: The information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British Army and RIR barracks are maintained in Northern Ireland; and if he will list those currently being planned, built, replaced, renovated, re-inforced, up-graded or extended or to be closed. [13079]

Dr. Reid: The number of British Army bases in Northern Ireland having approximately 100 soldiers or more is 63.

The Army estate is kept under constant review to ensure it provides best value for money and meets operational requirements. There are no plans to build additional barracks in Northern Ireland. The future of a number of bases is under consideration, but no final decisions have yet been made.

A continual programme of maintenance and development exists to keep the Army estate in good operational order. At present major works projects costing £300,000 or more have been initiated or are underway at the following barracks:

Alexander Barracks

Abercorn Barracks

Shackleton Barracks

Kinnegar Barracks

Palace Barracks

Thiepval Barracks

Massereene Barracks

Lisanelly Barracks

Girdwood Barracks.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the total staffing levels of the Royal Irish Regiment in September (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997, (i) in total and (ii) broken down (1) into numbers of full-time and part-time (2) by gender (3) by perceived religious/community origin and (4) battalion, and indicating those where service is limited to Northern Ireland. [13080]

Dr. Reid: The Royal Irish Regiment has one General Service battalion earmarked for world-wide duties, including taking turn on operations in Northern Ireland. The overall strength of the General Service Battalion as at 1 September was as follows: 572 in 1995, 576 in 1996 and 469 in 1997. There are no infantry cap-badged service women in these numbers. A breakdown by gender of other cap badges is not readily available nor is detail on the perceived religious/community origin of serving members of the General Service Battalion.

In addition to the General Service Battalion, there are six Home Service Battalions comprising full time (FT) and part time (PT) soldiers, who serve only in Northern Ireland, except for some training.

The total strength of the Home Service Battalions as at 30 September was 5,190 in 1995, 4,855 in 1996 and 4,757 in 1997. The information requested on (1) the breakdown into full-time and part-time, (2) gender, (3) perceived religious/community origin and (4) battalion is not readily available for the month of September; however the figures for 31 December 1995 and 1996 are set out in the table. Figures relating to 1997 will not be available until early next year.

Dr. Reid: The British Army Infantry Battalions currently committed to Northern Ireland are listed in the table, along with their strength and planned tour length:

Figures as at 30 September.
' The 1st Battalion The Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and the 1st Battalion The Royal Scots, respectively the Province Reserve Battalion and the Rural Reinforcement Battalion, are fully committed to Northern Ireland, although currently only one company of each is deployed in the Province.

In addition there are six Home Service battalions of the Royal Irish Regiment, totalling 4,757 soldiers, comprising both full-time and part-time members, which are wholly committed to service in Northern Ireland.

The security situation is kept under constant review and the level of Army support to the Royal Ulster Constabulary adjusted accordingly in line with their requirements. However, it is the Department's policy not to disclose details of future deployments to the Province.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the terms and conditions of hunt licences include a requirement that hunts follow the rules as set out by the Masters of Foxhounds Association; and if he will make a statement. [14447]

Mr. Spellar: Each Licence includes a Schedule of Hunting Rules for the hunt to abide by, one of which is that the "Masters of Foxhounds are to conduct their hunting in accordance with the Rules issued by the Masters of Foxhounds Association".

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many licences to hunt on his Department's land have been revoked in each of the last three years, indicating (a) the hunts involved and (b) the reasons for licence withdrawal; and if he will make a statement. [14439]

Mr. Spellar: No Licence for hunting over MOD land have been revoked in the last 3 years.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on whose authority licences are issued to hunt on his Department's land; how the terms and conditions are drawn up; and if he will make a statement. [14444]

Mr. Spellar: Licences are issued on the authority of the Secretary of State for Defence. The terms and conditions are agreed between the hunt and the local Defence Land Agent.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances the terms and conditions of hunt licences permit hunts to (a) block up badger setts, (b) dig out and flush foxes and (c) construct or maintain artificial earths on his Department's land; and if he will make a statement. [14446]

Mr. Spellar: Hunting licences do not generally contain clauses prohibiting the stopping up of badger setts, although all contain clauses stating that hunts must not cause damage to land or the woods, banks, fences and crops thereon. It is my Department's policy not to allow the practices of digging out and flushing foxes on its estate. The construction or maintenance of artificial earths on the Defence Estate is not permitted.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which hunts were issued licences to hunt on his Department's land for the (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 hunting seasons; and if he will make a statement. [14440]

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Genetically Modified Potatoes

11. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the deep-frying characteristics of genetically modified potatoes. [12620]

Mr. Morley: We are not funding any research on the deep-frying characteristics of genetically modified potatoes.

Agenda 2000

12. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the impact on the income of United Kingdom farmers of the adoption of Agenda 2000 proposals. [12621]

Dr. John Cunningham: It is likely that the immediate result of the Commission Agenda 2000 proposals for reform of the arable, beef and dairy sectors would be a reduction in total income from farming in the UK in the order of 2 per cent. of 1996 levels. Because proposals relating to modulation are unclear, this estimate assumes changes are applied on an unmodulated basis.

15. Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the European Commission Agenda 2000 document on agriculture; and if he will make a statement. [12624]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Agenda 2000 proposals are a welcome step towards positive reform of the CAP. However there are areas, for example milk, where the proposals do not go far enough. We will be looking to make progress on discussion of these during the UK Presidency of the Agriculture Council.

Meat Hygiene

14. Mr. Cranston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to start publishing the hygiene scores of abattoirs and meat handling facilities. [12623]

Mr. Rooker: Hygiene Assessment (HAS) scores have been published in banded form in the Ministry's monthly Meat Hygiene Enforcement Report since May 1997. Publication of HAS scores for individual named licensed abattoirs and cutting plants will commence in January 1998.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

16. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances for the coming year. [12625]

Mr. Morley: The rates will be announced as usual later this month.

Dioxin

17. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about dioxin levels in the area around the Coalite works in Bolsover. [12626]

Mr. Morley: The Department sampled milk from 19 farms in the Bolsover area in July this year. The results of this survey were published recently and show that the levels of dioxins in all samples of milk, except from one farm, are similar to those found in other parts of the UK. The one farm runs a suckler herd and does not produce milk for human consumption.

Spongiform Encephalopathies

18. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects all transmissible spongiform encephalopathies to be eliminated from all farm animals. [12627]

Mr. Rooker: Research by Professor Anderson of Oxford, which was published in "Nature" last year, indicates that the BSE epidemic will reach insignificant levels by the year 2001.

We are supporting research into sheep scrapie to learn more about this disease which we hope will enable the industry to develop future control strategies based on genetic resistance.

Cattle Breeding

19. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives he will introduce to encourage the farming of British Belgian Blue cattle and other pedigree beef breeds; and if he will make a statement. [12628]

Mr. Rooker: There are no plans to introduce initiatives to encourage the farming of British Belgian Blue cattle or other pedigree beef breeds.

Common Agricultural Policy

20. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the United Kingdom's (a) gross and (b) net contribution to the common agricultural policy for the year 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [12629]

Mr. Rooker: The United Kingdom contributes to the EU budget as a whole, and not to any particular part. The draft budget for 1998 is set at 84.7 becu (£55.9 billion), of which the CAP accounts for 41.0 becu (£27.1 billion). The 1999 budget will not be prepared until next spring. Actual expenditure will depend on various factors, including the weather, trade flows and decisions to be taken by the Council of Ministers, and cannot be predicted.

22. Mr. Pond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has made for reforming the common agricultural policy to provide greater value to consumers. [12631]

Mr. Rooker: The Government favour a more market-oriented Common Agricultural Policy through the phasing out of production related support. The European Commission agrees with our view, and has proposed reform of the cereals, beef and dairy regimes in that direction as part of its Agenda 2000 package. If the Commission's estimated reductions in market prices feed through fully to retail, total savings to consumers in the UK would be around £1 billion—equivalent to 2 per cent. of the retail food prices index.

English Wine Industry

21. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to promote the English wine industry. [12630]

Mr. Morley: I am aware of the advances which the English and Welsh wine industry have made in recent years. My colleagues and I will lose no appropriate opportunity to promote the industry's products.

Rural Needs

23. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals the Government have to address the special needs of people who live and work in rural areas. [12632]

Mr. Morley: The Government recognise the special needs of people who live and work in rural areas. We are committed to taking an integrated approach to tackling rural problems and want to encourage a vibrant rural economy in partnership with all those interested in countryside issues. The cross-departmental Comprehensive Spending Review of Countryside and Rural Policy which is currently underway will provide a basis on which to consider these issues.

Fish Conservation

24. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, when he next intends to meet the National Federation of Fisherman's Organisations to discuss conservation. [12633]

Mr. Morley: I am always ready to meet the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations to discuss conservation.

Farm Animal Welfare

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve the welfare of farm animals. [12615]

25. Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has put in place recently to improve the welfare of farm animals. [12634]

Mr. Morley: New EU rules on transport were implemented only five weeks after the General Election. We are consulting about new regulations on the welfare of calves and we are reviewing pre-export procedures for animals intended for further fattening or slaughter. The agreement we secured at Amsterdam for a new EU Treaty protocol on animal welfare has given a firm basis from which we can seek real improvements to EU welfare standards both during our forthcoming Presidency and beyond. This is only the beginning: a number of further initiatives are planned.

Beef

26. Mrs. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the stringency of the controls on British beef relative to those applying in the rest of the European Union. [12635]

Mr. Rooker: Controls on British beef are amongst the most stringent in the world.

The Commission carried out inspection missions to Member States in November and December 1996. Their report on Risk Factors and Surveillance procedures in the Community highlighted shortcomings in controls in some Member States. As a result the Commission have decided to take action against 10 Member States in respect of their apparent failure to enforce some aspects of Community legislation on BSE.

In May the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) considered the Commission's draft report and concluded that action should be taken to extend controls on specified bovine material (SBM) to imports from the EU, and to imports from third countries, other than those where there is no known risk to BSE, unless resolved on an EU wide basis. A Commission Decision laying down controls for the removal and disposal of Specified Risk Material from cattle was adopted by the Commission on 30 July and will apply throughout the Community from 1 January 1998. In the meantime, only four other Member States have their own controls on specified material in cattle: the Republic of Ireland, France, the Netherlands and Portugal.

BSE

28. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the full cost of the BSE crisis to (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other European Union countries. [12637]

Mr. Rooker: Our estimate of the financial cost of the BSE crisis to the Exchequer over the four years 1996–97 to 1999–2000 is approximately £3.7 billion. The Department has commissioned an independent study to provide a comprehensive assessment of the economic impact of BSE across the whole UK economy and within particular regions. We do not have details of the financial cost to other EU countries.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle has been in the United Kingdom in each of the past 10 years, expressed as a percentage of each identifiable breed. [14180]

Mr. Rooker: The number of cattle confirmed as having BSE in the United Kingdom in each year of the last 10 complete years and the most recent figures for 1997 are listed by cattle breed in the table:

The Department does not hold data on the numbers of resident cattle by breed and cannot therefore calculate the percentages requested.

Food Labelling

29. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure labels on foodstuffs carry accurate information. [12638]

Mr. Rooker: We are determined to improve openness and information to consumers. We have succeeded in getting EC agreement to better labelling of mechanically recovered meat and are pressing our EC partners for all foods to be labelled if they contain genetically modified material. When the review of nutrition labelling rules get underway we shall argue for more, simpler and better presented information.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many agreements under the countryside stewardship scheme involve access. [12636]

Mr. Morley: The Countryside Stewardship Scheme Currently has 1,207 agreements which include access elements, amounting to almost 20 per cent. of total agreements.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make representations to other EU states to urge eastern European countries to end the export of live animals to the EU. [13854]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission and other Member States are already aware of the UK Government's opposition to the long distance transport of live animals intended for further fattening or slaughter, irrespective of the origin of those animals or their destination. We will continue to make known our opposition to such trade whenever the opportunity arises.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of time spent by local veterinary inspectors in inspecting animals destined for export to ensure that they are fit to travel as required by the Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997; and if he will make a statement. [13931]

Mr. Rooker: Local Veterinary Inspectors, as veterinary surgeons, must use their professional judgment in ensuring that sufficient time is given to assessing the fitness of animals to travel. The State Veterinary Inspectors audit their procedures to ensure that the proper standards are maintained. In addition, for export health certification purposes, the Department will be producing clearer instruction for Local Veterinary Inspectors on what an inspection should comprise. It is proposed that this will include a benchmark for the length of time an inspection ought to take, according to the different circumstances which may prevail.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14372]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 216.

Sea Defence (Waveney)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which areas of coastline in the Waveney constituency he considers to be most vulnerable to breaches of sea defence. [14295]

Mr. Morley: This Department is responsible for flood and coastal defence policy in England and significantly contributes to the funding of capital defence measures. However, individual flood and coastal defence works are designed, constructed and maintained by the Environment Agency, local councils and Internal Drainage Boards. These bodies identify the need for defence measures locally, including which areas of coastline are most vulnerable to breaching, and decide which projects to promote and their timing.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the expenditure made by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [13253]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The Department has made no payments of the kind described in the relevant years. Only one such payment has been made by the Executive Agencies, this being for £4,000 to a consultant, on behalf of the Meat Hygiene Service, in 1995–96.

Information on such expenditure by non-departmental public bodies is not centrally available, but is currently being sought. I will write to the hon. Member with the collated information as soon as possible.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the policy of his Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if he will make a statement. [13254]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The general policy of the Department and its Executive Agencies is that no use should be made of external consultants in respect of taxation matters. However, there was one such transaction by the Meat Hygiene Service in the financial year 1995–96, as reported in my reply to the hon. Gentleman's previous Question.

Non-departmental public bodies enjoy greater freedom of action, and are responsible for their own tax affairs. However, the Department's resources are available to all such bodies and officials are sometimes consulted for advice.

Over-30-months Scheme

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much meat and bone meal is in storage as a result of the over-30-months scheme. [14598]

Mr. Rooker: As at 31 October 267,387 tonnes of meat and bone meal were held in store.

Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines he has issued to the directors of BBSRC about his Department's responsibility for core research and staff at BBSRC Institutes. [14502]

Mr. Rooker: The Department funds research in support of its policies and, within this framework, commissions a substantial amount of research at BBSRC institutes. However, responsibility for core-funding of science and for staff at these institutes rests with the Office of Science and Technology and BBSRC management themselves. It is not therefore appropriate for this Department to issue guidelines on these matters to BBSRC Directors.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Admiralty House

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the (a) official entertainment functions and (b) conferences which have been held at Admiralty House since May 1997. [12922]

Civil Service Pensions

Mr. MacGregor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what would be the cost of indexing pensions paid to civil servants on early retirement under the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme from the ages of 50 to 55 years. [14424]

Dr. David Clark: Civil Service pensions, along with those paid to other public service pensioners, are increased in accordance with the provisions of the Pensions Increase Acts. Any change for the Civil Service scheme would have repercussions for other public service schemes; in very broad terms and additional cost of indexing all public service pensions from the ages of 50 to 55 years is likely to be at least £50 million a year. The cost for the Civil Service scheme alone would be some £2½ million. The government have no plans to change the current arrangements.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

National Audit Office (Staff)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission if he will make a statement on the number of staff employed by the NAO. [11705]

Mr. Sheldon: The current strength of the National Audit Office is 751 staff. In addition the Office has at present another 98 staff on secondment with other organisations or on maternity leave or career break.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Dome

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the expected entrance cost to the Millennium Dome at Greenwich; what number of United Kingdom citizens are expected to visit the Millennium Dome during the year 2000; and if he will make a statement. [13275]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is developing a comprehensive pricing structure which will aim to maximise visitor income whilst ensuring that the Experience is accessible to all who wish to visit. The NMEC aims to achieve 12 million visits to the Experience from the UK and overseas.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what measures are in place to ensure that there will be no cost overrun for the public sector or from lottery funds relating to the project to construct the Millennium Dome; and if he will make a statement. [13276]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company has robust management and financial controls in place which are in line with the terms set by the Millennium Commission for the award of its grant, and in line with conditions set by me as the Shareholder. When the Prime Minister announced the go-ahead for the project on 19 June, it was on the proviso that there would be no extra burden on the public purse over and above the grant-in-aid allocated to English Partnerships for acquisition and preparation of the peninsula site.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the planned life expectancy of the Millennium Dome at Greenwich; and if he will make a statement. [13277]

Mr. Mandelson: The Government are currently considering a range of possible, self-financing, uses for the Millennium Experience Dome over the longer term. Its life expectancy will depend on future use and upkeep, with no significant structural refit expected for at least the first 25 years.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) what private sector moneys have so far been secured for the Millennium Dome at Greenwich; what proportion of planned private sector moneys this represents; and if he will make a statement; [13274]

(2) how many private sector sponsorship deals have so far been signed in relation to constructing and running the planned Millennium Dome at Greenwich; and if he will make a statement. [13279]

Mr. Mandelson: There is a significant level of interest from potential sponsors and this is expected to be translated into firm commitments in the coming months.

HEALTH

Erb's Palsy

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the incidence by health authority for each of the last five years of Erb's palsy; and what research into this condition his Department is currently undertaking. [13855]

Mr. Boateng: Information on the number of completed in-patient treatments of those patients admitted to National Health Service hospitals in England with a primary diagnosis of Erb's palsy for the five years up to 1994–95 has been placed in the Library. The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council. The MRC does not currently fund any research into Erb's palsy. It has not received any applications for funds to carry out such work. However, a working group under the auspices of the Confidential Enquiry into Stillbirths and Deaths in Infancy (CESDI) is currently preparing guidance on the management of shoulder dystocia (misplacement of the baby's shoulder in the birth canal) which is considered to be a contributory factor in many cases of Erb's palsy.

Deregulation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14384]

Ms Jowell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave him on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 216.

Private Finance Initiative

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent changes have taken place in the private finance initiative aimed at reducing the financing costs of capital developments. [14106]

Mr. Milburn: Since August the National Health Service Executive has been undertaking a review of the process and product of the Private Finance Initiative (PFI) in the NHS. One of their tasks is to make specific recommendations on how the cost of the procurement process under the PFI can be reduced. The results of the review will be announced in early 1998.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made about the future incidence of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease. [14092]

Ms Jowell: On 15 September 1997 the Chief Medical Officer announced the formation of a sub-group of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) with the following remit

"To assess the information about the epidemiology of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease and develop as far as possible advice on trends in the disease".

The sub-group will have as an early task an assessment of what information will be needed to make soundly based estimates of the future incidence of the disease. However, on present indications it will be three to four years before they are in a position to do this.

In the meantime it remains too early to make confident estimates of the likely number of cases.

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has recently evaluated on the links between Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy and new variant CJD. [14094]

Ms Jowell: Two research papers were published in Nature on 2 October 1997—"Transmissions to mice indicate that new variant CJD is caused by the BSE agent" by M. E. Bruce and colleagues based at the Neuropathogenesis Unit in Edinburgh and "The same prion strain causes nvCJD and BSE" by A. F. Hill and colleagues based at Imperial College School of Medicine at St. Mary's, London.

The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) considered these findings and concluded that they provide convincing evidence that the agent which causes Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy is the same as that which causes new variant Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease (nvCJD). The Committee also stated that the most likely explanation of the cases of nvCJD to date remains exposure to BSE before the introduction of the Specified Bovine Offals (SBO) ban in 1989.

SEAC also concluded that the necessary measures to protect public health and animal health are in place and saw no need for any changes in the light of these new findings.

Incontinence

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation (a) has been carried out and (b) is planned by his Department of the total cost of health care provided by the NHS for incontinence. [14029]

Mr. Boateng: No evaluation of these costs has been carried out and none is planned.

Specific information on the cost of health care provided by the National Health Service for people with incontinence is not collected centrally and we have no plans to change this. The Department is seeking to reduce the burden of data collection by the NHS and rationalise data flows within the NHS and between the NHS and the centre. The collection of additional information on incontinence would not be in line with this policy.

Community Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue formal guidance to local authorities so as to ensure that BD8 referrals automatically trigger a full community care assessment by local authorities. [14028]

Mr. Boateng: The proposal that BD8s should automatically trigger a full community care assessment by local authorities is made in a recent report by the Royal National Institute for the Blind, A Question of Risk: Community care for older visually impaired people in England and Wales. The department will study the report carefully.

Health Trusts (Assets)

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assets currently in the hands of health trusts are being considered for transfer to the private sector; and if he will make a statement. [14075]

Mr. Milburn: The value of surplus or redundant assets owned by National Health Service trusts can form part of the negotiations between the trust and the private sector in a Private Finance Initiative deal, but any such assets must be sold or disposed of at open market value.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what time scale the review of assets is being conducted; how much the review is expected to cost; and if he will make a statement. [14105]

Mr. Milburn: The next periodic revaluation of National Health Service land and buildings to take place in summer 1999 to allow NHS trusts, health authorities and other NHS bodies to establish accurate fixed asset values as of 31 March 2000. The exercise is expected to cost in the region of £2.25 million.

NHS Patients

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients he estimates will require NHS treatment in each of the next five years; [14458]

(2) how many patients he estimates will receive NHS treatment in each of the next five years. [14459]

Mr. Milburn: The health service will treat more patients over the next five years. The Government's election manifesto stated that the Government will raise spending on the National Health Service in real terms every year, and put money towards patient care. The manifesto also made clear our commitment to the historic principle of the NHS:

"if you are ill or injured there will be a NHS there to help . . . access will be based on need . . . not on your ability to pay . . . or on who your GP happens to be or on where you live".

We intend to keep to these promises.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients he estimates will be on NHS waiting lists on 30 April 2002. [14460]

Mr. Milburn: Despite the dreadful situation we inherited from our predecessors we are committed to having shorter waiting lists by the end of this Parliament.

National Blood Service

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) hospitals and (b) NHS trusts have signed their annual contract with the National Blood Service (i) nationally and (ii) in each zone. [14456]

Mr. Boateng: The information is not collected in the form requested. However, details of the number of contracts signed for 1997–98 are as follows:

Zone	Number
London and South East	110
Midlands and South West	21
Northern	67
Total	198

A further 22 contracts have been agreed, but not yet signed.

To address the problems involved in the present arrangements, a working group has been set up to agree a common framework for commissioning and for national prices.

Air Pollution

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the Under-Secretary of State's letter of 22 October, (MR/EE/PSO/14053/97), what interim action he is taking as a result of the Poloniecki study on air pollution. [14462]

Ms Jowell: The Poloniecki study on the effects of air pollution on heart disease is currently being considered by the Department of Health's Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants (COMEAP). I shall write to my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow with the Committee's views as soon as possible.

As part of the review of the National Air Quality Strategy the effects of carbon monoxide and particles on health will be examined. The Poloniecki study will form part of the research literature that will be considered.

Emergency Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the final report of the group led by the Chief Medical Officer into the provision of emergency services in the community will be published; and if he will make a statement. [14487]

Mr. Boateng: The report was published on 19 September this year under the title 'Developing Emergency Services in the Community: The Final report' and was distributed widely within the National Health Service under cover of an Executive Letter, EL(97)46. Copies of the report and the letter have been placed in the Library.

As part of the implementation programme, the Department of Health is funding telephone immediate care and advice lines to be piloted in three sites from early next year.

Prescription Charges

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review regulations whereby two or more prescription charges are payable when two or more medicines are prescribed in circumstances where medicines are in one pack and cannot be taken separately. [14698]

Mr. Milburn: This and all other aspects of prescription charges are being considered as part of the Department of Health's Comprehensive Spending Review. We aim to complete the review by next spring. The Government remain committed to the historic principle of the National Health Service that health services will be available to all and access will be based on need, not on ability to pay.

Royal Bournemouth and Christchurch Hospitals NHS Trust

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce the appointment of the next chairman of the Royal Bournemouth and Christchurch Hospitals NHS Trust. [14473]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health will shortly be considering recommendations for this post. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

NHS Appointments

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what notice he plans to give to NHS trust and health authority members on their reappointment. [14583]

Mr. Milburn: We would normally prefer to give advance notice to serving members of National Health Service boards on whether they are to be reappointed. Trust appointments have been delayed this year because of the introduction of new criteria for board membership, and the need to consider new candidates arising from over 1,800 nominations by Members of Parliament and local authorities. Apart from exceptional cases, these appointments will be confirmed very shortly.

Health Authority Contracts

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by health care provider, for each of the last four years, the number of contracts each health authority had in place, indicating how many of these had been referred for arbitration within the NHS region; and how many were left unsigned by (a) the provider and (b) the purchaser at the end of the year to which they applied, or for 1997–98, at the end of October 1997. [14611]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested may be collected at a regional level but it is at the discretion of the regional office and is not authorised or validated centrally.

Solihull Hospital

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the range of services provided to patients by Solihull Hospital. [13798]

Mr. Milburn: The range of services provided by Solihull Hospital is as follows:

Accident and Emergency services;

Outpatient Clinics for most specialities;

Day surgery;

Maternity services, including Special Care Baby Unit;

Diagnostic facilities, including a Magnetic Resonance Imaging scanner;

In-patient wards for emergency and elective admissions;

Coronary care and intensive therapy units;

Renal dialysis unit;

Acute mental health services.

Paint (Calcium Hydroxide)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to encourage the use of paint containing calcium hydroxide on hospital (a) surfaces, (b) walls and (c) air ducts; and if he will make a statement; [13802]

(2) what assessment he has made of the benefits of coating hospital surfaces in paint containing calcium hydroxide in relation to the control of Staphylococcus aureus; and if he will make a statement; [13803]

(3) what assessment he has made of the benefits of coating the insides of hospital air ducts in paint containing calcium hydroxide in relation to the spread of Aspergillus niger; and if he will make a statement. [13804]

Mr. Milburn: The Department of Health is aware of the advances of technology in paint manufacture. The view of the Department's expert advisers is that wall and floor surfaces in hospitals, in practice, play little part in the transmission of infection, including Staphylococcus aureus. Aspergillus niger is a very uncommon cause of infection in hospitals. The source of such fungal spores is generally outside air.

Duct coating designed to inactivate suspended microbes will make insufficient contact to produce significant reduction in their numbers.

Patients with severely reduced immunity, such as bone marrow transplant patients, are particularly prone to A. niger. Units for such patients are generally supplied with air that has passed through High Efficiency Particulate Air filters, tested to British Standard BS3928, located in ductwork. Such filters are highly effective at removing airborne microbial contamination, including spores of A. niger.

Tissue Research

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce a national scheme to distribute human tissue unfit for transplant for use in research; and if he will make a statement. [13801]

Ms Jowell: The donation of human tissue for research purposes is permitted under the Human Tissue Act 1961. However, if a person (or his/her family) has given permission for organs to be taken for transplantation and those organs prove unsuitable for transplantation they cannot automatically be used for research purposes. Separate consent must be obtained.

Psychologists

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce legislation to control the activities of those calling themselves psychologists who have been struck off the Register of Psychologists. [13796]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have no current plans to introduce a system of statutory registration of the title psychologists. I recently met with representatives of the British Psychological Society and indicated the Government's intention for officials to work with them to develop a programme of work in order to ensure that existing systems for regulating and promoting good practice are maintained and developed.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Opera

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when Sir Richard Eyre's working group on the future of the Royal Opera House and English National Opera will begin its work. [15307]

Mr. Chris Smith: Sir Richard has already begun work and hopes to finalise the membership of the working group shortly. He plans that the working group should meet later this month. On 6 November, Sir Richard issued an open consultation letter inviting views from all those with an interest, and who wish to contribute to this debate. The text of the letter, and of my letter to Sir Richard setting out in full the terms of reference for the review I have asked him to conduct, have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the suppliers to his Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13541]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 30 October 1997]: All departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the amount of money spent by tobacco companies on the sponsorship of (a) sport and (b) the arts in each of the last five years. [13745]

Mr. Banks: The amounts spent by tobacco companies on sports sponsorship in the last five years for which figures are available are:

1995–96	7,412,000
1994–95	8,062,000
1993–94	7,576,000
1991–92	8,981,000

These figures are provided under the Voluntary Agreement on Sponsorship of Sport by Tobacco Companies in the UK. Tobacco companies do not operate under similar arrangements with regard to arts sponsorship. However, the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts (ABSA) has recently estimated the total spread of tobacco companies' support for the arts in the UK to be around £1–1½ million per annum.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what legal penalties exist in other European Union countries for the issuing of cheques without covering funds. [13794]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The information is not available.

Press Officers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total number of Treasury press officers at present; how many Treasury press officers have left their posts since 2 May; and if he will make a statement. [13367]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 5 November 1997]: There are currently six Treasury press officers. Since 2 May, two staff have moved from the Press Office and two staff have joined.

Tax Reclamation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total tax reclaimed by Government Departments, agencies and other public bodies in the latest year for which information is available; and if he will make a statement. [13534]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 October 1997]: From the tax returns submitted by Government departments and agencies during 1996–97, the total amount of value added tax due was £521 million, the total amount reclaimed was £1,500 million resulting in a balance repaid of £979 million. Figures for other public bodies are not available.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount of value added tax (a) reclaimed and (b) repaid to NHS trusts and other NHS bodies in the latest year for which statistics are available; and if he will make a statement. [13533]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 October 1997]: From the tax returns submitted by NHS trusts and bodies during 1996–97, the total amount of value added tax due was £72 million, the total amount reclaimed was £492 million resulting in a balance repaid of £420 million.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what directions he has given to Government Departments in relation to their expenditures on tax avoidance advice; and if he will make a statement. [13532]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 October 1997]: Guidance on tax avoidance was issued to departments in December 1996. This guidance warns departments against the use of tax advisers for tax avoidance purposes.

Savings

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the savings rate in the United Kingdom of increasing taxes on the income from savings; and if he will make a statement. [13030]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The effect would depend on the nature of the increase and how it was distributed.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the effect on the savings rate in the United Kingdom of the elimination of the investment income surcharge. [13711]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The saving ratio is dependent on many factors which would make it very difficult to isolate the effect of abolishing the investment income surcharge.

Charities' Investment Income

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment the Government have made of the impact on charities' investment income of the changes in advance corporation tax announced in the last Budget. [14296]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The abolition of payment of tax credits on the dividends of UK companies will not affect charities until April 1999. Beyond that, charities will benefit from a five year scheme of special payments to ease the transition to the new treatment of dividends.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14390]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 5 November, Official Report, column 216, by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

SCOTLAND

Curriculum Council

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the forthcoming policy and financial review of the Scottish Consultative Council on the curriculum. [15305]

Mr. Dewar: My Department will conduct a review of the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum during 1997–98 under the programme of 5-yearly non-departmental public body reviews. This review will examine the justification for the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum on policy grounds and the system of financial management control within the Council.

The first stage of the review will take the form of a "prior options" study. This will assess the extent to which the functions that the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum perform are necessary for the achievement of the Government's policies, and will examine thoroughly the scope for abolition, transferring part or all of the functions to another body, rationalisation, privatisation and continuation as an NDPB. The results of this prior options study will inform a detailed review of the Council's financial management and control systems.

The review will also examine the scope for co-ordination of the activities of the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum with other bodies to ensure maximum value for money from the central government resources available for education in Scotland.

The prior options study will commence in December 1997. In order to help ensure that all options are considered fully, comments are invited from interested parties.

Educational Technology Council

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the forthcoming policy and financial management review of the Scottish Council for Educational Technology. [15306]

Mr. Dewar: My Department will conduct a review of the Scottish Council for Educational Technology during 1997–98 under the programme of 5 yearly non-departmental public body reviews. The review will examine the status and functions of SCET in accordance with cabinet office guidance.

The first stage of the review will take the form of a "prior options" study. This will assess the extent to which the functions that SCET performs are necessary from the achievement of the Government's policies, and whether there is scope for privatising, contracting out or transferring all, or part of their functions to another body or bodies. The results of the prior options study will inform a detailed review of its policy and financial management systems.

The review will also examine the scope for co-ordination of the activities of the Scottish Council for Educational Technology with other bodies to ensure maximum value for money from the central Government resources available for education in Scotland.

The prior options study will commence in early December 1997. In order to help ensure all options are considered fully, comments are invited from interested parties. Comments should be sent by 5 December 1997 to:

NORTHERN IRELAND

United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the concluding observations pertaining to Northern Ireland made by the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child following examination of the United Kingdom periodic report in January 1995; and if she will list the progress made in addressing each of the committee's concerns. [13068]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The concluding observations made in respect of Northern Ireland relate to a range of issues: the impact on children of emergency legislation; juvenile justice; children in training schools; race relations legislation; and integrated and Irish medium education. I shall deal with each in turn.

Emergency legislation

The Committee expressed concern about the lack of information on the difficulties experienced by children living in Northern Ireland and the effect on children of the operation of emergency legislation.

The legislation to enable the security forces and the criminal justice system in Northern Ireland to deal effectively with terrorism seeks to combine operational utility and public acceptability by providing measures which are appropriate and proportionate to the threat of terrorism, while at the same time protecting the rights of individuals. While there has been no official assessment of the particular impact on children of the emergency legislation in Northern Ireland, special safeguards have been introduced into the statutory codes of practice governing the detention, treatment and questioning of people under the terrorism provisions. These ensure that in the rare event of the police having to interview anyone who appears to be under 17, the well-being and rights of the interviewee are given the highest priority. Among the special safeguards is a requirement that they must be accompanied by an appropriate adult.

The emergency legislation permits a constable or member of the security forces to stop and search any person in specific circumstances laid down in legislation. If it is necessary to search a child under 14 this is normally done by a female police officer or a female soldier. For a juvenile older than this, the search is carried out by a police officer or soldier of the same sex. Any allegation of unprofessional behaviour by a member of the security forces is treated very seriously. Procedures exist for dealing with such complaints and are widely publicised, although allegations of harassment against children have been very rare.

The emergency legislation is independently reviewed and renewed annually following debates in Parliament. The Government has recently launched a major review of counter-terrorism legislation in the United Kingdom. The aim is to end the present temporary arrangements and produce permanent legislation which will deal with all kinds of terrorism, including international terrorism.

Juvenile justice

The Committee concerned that the Training School ethos appeared to lay emphasis on imprisonment and punishment. A proposal for a draft Criminal Justice (Children) (Northern Ireland) Order was published in February this year. The draft legislation has been prepared as part of a developing juvenile justice strategy. An important part of that strategy is to reduce the number of young people in custody. Custody will be restricted to those who have committed a serious offence or who pose a serious danger to the public. In all criminal proceedings the court will be required to have regard to the welfare of the child before ordering any disposal. At present the only custodial disposal available to the courts for all but the most serious offences is the training school order, which authorises detention for an indeterminate period of up to two years—the indeterminate nature of the sentence was another of the Committee's concerns. The proposed legislation will abolish the training school order and replace it with a new juvenile justice centre order. This would be for a determinate period between six months and two years, only half of which would be spent in custody, with the lower end of the range being the norm. It is intended that while in custody children will be given education and training to help them adapt to a return to the community and to reduce the risk of re-offending. They will be supported in this by a period of supervision.

Children in care

The Committee was also concerned that children in care could be held in training schools. Following the commencement of the Children (Northern Ireland) Order in November 1996 it is no longer possible for a child in Northern Ireland to be placed in a training school on care grounds.

Race relations

The Committee recommended that race relations legislation be introduced in Northern Ireland. The Race Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 came fully into operation on 4 August 1997. The legislation replicates the GB Act and makes discrimination on racial grounds unlawful in employment, training, education, the provision of goods, facilities and services, and the disposal and management of premises. The Irish Traveller community is defined as a racial group for the purposes of the Order. A Commission for Racial Equality for Northern Ireland has been established to help enforce the legislation and to promote equality of opportunity and good relations between people of different racial groups.

Education

The Committee advocated further support for teaching the Irish language in schools and for integrated education.

In order to meet the statutory requirements of the Language Studies area of the study of Northern Ireland Curriculum, pupils must study one of the following: French, German, Italian, Spanish or Irish. It is for schools to make provision in response to demand from pupils.

A growing number of parents in Northern Ireland are choosing to have their children educated through the Irish language. Irish-medium schools may achieve grant-aided status under the same procedures as other school sectors. Since 1995 four primary schools and one secondary school have been given grant-aided status. There are now eight grant-aided Irish-medium schools with a combined enrolment of over 1,100 pupils, 95 per cent. of all pupils in Irish-medium schools are attending grant-aided schools.

The Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order places a statutory duty on the Department of Education to encourage and facilitate the development of integrated education, which it defines as "the education together at school of Protestant and Roman Catholic pupils". Under this legislation new integrated schools qualify for Government grants immediately provided they meet a number of criteria including minimum viability levels. In addition procedures are in place for transforming existing schools to integrated status; these may be initiated directly by parents.

When the Order became law in 1990 there were only seven grant-aided integrated schools; five primary and two secondary. Today there are 33, of which 11 are secondary schools. Their combined enrolment is just over 7,000 pupils, which represents around two per cent. of total pupil numbers. The rate of growth in the sector will be determined by parental demand; there will be no question of Government imposing integration.

The Department of Education will issue guidelines on transformation to integrated status to all schools later this year. These should provide a further stimulus to the growth of the sector.

Information Service

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for the future of the Information Service in Northern Ireland. [15429]

Marjorie Mowlam: A review of Information Services in Northern Ireland was presented to me on Wednesday 5 November. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

The review recommends that the role and approach of the Northern Ireland Information Service should continue to be consistent with the traditional core principles and approach of government information work. I agree. It is important that the professional reputation of the Northern Ireland Information Service for accuracy, impartiality and objective presentation of the Government's policies be maintained. Its staff have provided loyal, committed and professional service to successive Governments through some of the most difficult and traumatic events.

At the same time, the review sets out a vision for the Information Service: centrally placed at the heart of the Government in Northern Ireland, taking a strategic approach, active in promoting the Government's policies as well as reactive, and delivering an up-to-date service to the media, consistent with the professional requirements for accuracy, impartiality and objectivity.

I endorse this approach. In particular, as recommended by the review, the posts of Director of Communications and Head of News will be filled by open competition ensuring transparent selection procedures supervised by the Civil Service Commission.

DEFENCE

Ministry Houses

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish how many former Ministry of Defence houses at Colchester, sold to Annington Homes, have been re-sold by the company together with the average sale price; and what was the average price received by the Government when the houses were sold. [13704]

Mr. Spellar: At the time of the sale 46 houses at Colchester were transferred freehold to Annington Homes. The price for individual properties was not separately negotiated but was part of the total sale and leasing package, the receipt for which was £1.662 billion. Once properties are released to Annington Homes, questions relating to resale prices are a matter for that company, but the contract between Annington Homes and MOD provides for a share of the profits obtained from resale to be paid to the Exchequer. Over £1 million from the profit share arrangements within the Annington Homes contract has already been received.

Assets Review

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what time scale the review of his Department's assets is being conducted; how much the review is expected to cost; and if he will make a statement. [14104]

Dr. Reid: The review of defence assets is part of the Strategic Defence Review, work on which is expected to be completed around the turn of the year. We are seeking to ensure that all assets are used with maximum efficiency, and that any surplus is identified and disposed of. The work is being undertaken mainly through existing structures. Some extra costs will be incurred, for example in the process of outside consultation, but it is too early to predict the total.

Britannia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of the farewell voyage of HMS Britannia and its escort vessel. [14416]

Dr. Reid: The estimated additional cost of the farewell voyage of HMY Britannia and its escort vessel is some £157,000.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning delays in processing visa applications at Islamabad. [14230]

Mr. Fatchett: We have received many representations expressing concern at the delays in processing visa applications at Islamabad. The majority of these resulted from computer problems which have now been resolved.

Our correspondence statistics are not broken down in such a way as to be able to give precise figures of representations on this specific subject.

Procurement Exhibition

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visas granted to military, security, police, paramilitary or special forces personnel invited by (a) the British Government and (b) private companies to attend the 1997 contingency and operational procurement exhibition at Farnborough. [14404]

Mr. Fatchett: The information requested is not systematically recorded and is not therefore available.

Immigration (Shahzad Ali)

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Bradford, North of 30 July, 29 August, 11 September, 1 October and 17 October concerning the case of Shahzad Ali, reference IMM/D0887. [14734]

Mr. Fatchett: The letters referred to by my hon. Friend were answered on 5 November 1997.

Cuba

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in respect of commemorating the 40th anniversary of the revolution in Cuba. [14813]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have received no representations in respect of commemorating the 40th anniversary of the revolution in Cuba.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Green Pound

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received in the last 12 months on the impact of Green Pound fluctuations on agriculture; and if he will make a statement. [14079]

Mr. Rooker: The Department has received about 90 written representations on the impact of Green Pound fluctuations on agriculture. Ministers and officials have also received delegations from farming and farm-related organisations on several occasions.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration is currently being given to an application for European funds to offset the effects of Green Pound price fluctuations on agricultural prices and subsidies; and if he will make a statement. [14164]

Mr. Rooker: Paying this aid would have significant implications for UK public expenditure. We are keeping the case for payment under review but, on the evidence currently available, have concluded that the case for payment is at present not proven.

Tail Docking (Prosecutions)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions for tail docking have taken place since the 1994 Welfare of Livestock Regulations were enacted; and if he will make a statement. [14690]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire (Mr. Ainger) on 3 November, Official Report, column 38.

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the nature and value of contracts his Department has entered into and (b) discussions ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14957]

Mr. Morley: From records held centrally, the Department has not entered into any contracts with the Monitor Consultancy and is not aware of any discussions with the company.

Regional Panels

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each of the former MAFF regional panels the names of the members at the time of their dissolution, the organisations they represented and their contact addresses. [14771]

Cattle Slaughter

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions he is making for cattle slaughtered for human consumption after 1 January 1998, if they were born before 1 July 1996 and have no passport. [14773]

Mr. Rooker: Cattle born before 1 July 1996 are not required to have a passport. Cattle passports were only introduced for cattle born or imported into Great Britain from 1 July 1996; therefore cattle born before this date and presented for slaughter within 30 months are eligible to enter the human food chain.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Sewage Outlets

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria are used by the Environment Agency to decide whether a sewage outlet is high risk. [14039]

Angela Eagle: Criteria to decide whether an effluent should be considered "critical" are set out in the Environment Agency Discharge Consent Manual. These include cases where the effluent is contributing to non-achievement of a water quality objective (including those implementing EC Directives); where it may adversely affect water quality at an abstraction point for potable supply; and where it may adversely affect Sites of Special Scientific Interest or substantial fisheries.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many sewage outlets were not sampled by the Environment Agency because they were not deemed high risk in each year since the Agency's establishment. [14038]

Angela Eagle: Relevant information is not yet available for the period since the establishment in April 1996 of the Environment Agency. However, in 1995 the National Rivers Authority sampled 6,408 out of 7,429 sewage discharges with numeric consents and monitored 1,532 out of 1,786 water company sewage treatment works with descriptive consents. Intermittent discharges from combined sewer overflows, of which there are estimated to be some 25,000, are considerably diluted by rainwater and are routinely monitored by the Agency only in areas of exceptionally high amenity value. However, the design and construction of new and refurbished storm water overflows is controlled on a site specific basis by the Agency on the principle that the frequency of discharge should be related to the dilution available and the uses made of the receiving water.

Noise Control

Mr. MacGregor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to develop policies to reduce road and rail traffic noise, in respect of recommendations contained in the twentieth report of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution. [14425]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government is concerned about the impact of noise pollution generally and is aware of the increasing public concern about both road traffic noise and, to a lesser extent, rail noise. It is exploring a range of policy options to mitigate the impact of noise on the environment, and will take the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution's report into account in its work towards a White Paper on integrated transport.

Non-lead Shot

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's letter of 13 October, (EE/PSO/13302/97), what consultation is taking place with the Welsh, Scottish and Northern Ireland Offices and other Governments Departments on encouragement of the use of non-lead shot. [14461]

Angela Eagle: My Department has consulted a wide range of Government Departments, including the Welsh, Scottish and Northern Ireland Offices, about the issue concerning the phase out of lead shot over wetlands.

Road Accidents

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the total number of road accidents that occur every year where a contributory cause was the uncorrected eyesight of one or more drivers. [14493]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No information is currently collected nationally on causation factors in road accidents. It is not therefore possible to supply the specific information requested.

Cockpit Voice Recorders

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the letter T/PSO/5874/97 of 15 July, to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what progress has been made in research into the use of the CVR to differentiate between bomb blasts and structural failure. [14501]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A study has recently been completed by the Institute of Sound and Vibration Research at Southampton University into Cockpit Voice Recorder Transient Signatures. The results of this study have been produced in a report which has been made available to the Department. The conclusions are currently under consideration by the Air Accidents Investigation Branch.

Road and Bridge Tolls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the environmental benefits of increased tolls on specific roads and bridges; and if he will make a statement. [14448]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 6 November 1997]: No such assessment has been undertaken and there are at present no plans to do so.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions his Department has had with the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising to discuss (a) punctuality targets and (b) standards of service on the Virgin Trains west coast main line franchise. [14776]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have discussed these and other issues at my regular meetings with the Franchising Director. Punctuality targets and standards of service are a matter for the Franchising Director to address with the Train Operating Company.

Railways (Hygiene Standards)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce targets for rail franchise holders to encompass standards of cleanliness and hygiene for on-board services. [14778]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for the Franchising Director. The franchise agreements require franchise operators to carry out regular surveys of customer satisfaction and to seek an overall improvement in satisfaction during the franchise term. The aspects monitored vary from franchise to franchise and the Franchising Director may require other aspects to be added to the surveys during the franchise. The majority of franchise operators currently monitor certain aspects of train cleanliness. None specifically monitor hygiene of on-board catering services, though normal health and safety requirements apply.

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the nature and value of contracts his Department has entered into and (b) discussions ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14946]

Angela Eagle: (a) The Department has not entered into any contracts with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990.

(b) I am unaware of any discussions that Ministers or officials of this department have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990.

Railways (Punctuality and Reliability)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he intends to take to ensure that rail franchise holders meet their specified targets for punctuality and reliability. [14777]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for the Franchising Director, through enforcement of the terms of franchise agreements. The Government's task is to improve the railways. We will establish more effective and accountable regulation by the Rail Regulator. We will ensure that the public subsidy serves the public interest, and will establish a new rail authority combining the functions currently carried out by the Franchising Director and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to provide a clear, coherent and strategic programme for the development of the railways, so that passenger expectations are met. As a first step we have announced several new measures including new Objectives, Instructions and Guidance for the Franchising Director and a voluntary Concordat with the Rail Regulator. The Franchising Director's new Objectives make it his principal aim to win more passengers on to the railway, secure improvements in the quality of rail services and manage franchise contracts tightly in the public interest.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Randhir Singh

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to public funds of the removal of Mr. R. Singh of Spalding street, Leicester. [13982]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Mr. Randhir Singh was removed from the United Kingdom to India on 27 October 1997 at public expense. The price of the airline ticket was £535.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the refusal of the custody sergeant at Charles street police station, Leicester to allow the hon. Member for Leicester East to see Mr. R. Singh except with a police officer present. [13980]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Code of Practice for the Detention, Treatment and Questioning of Persons by Police Officers (Code C), issued under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, does not apply to people who have been served a notice advising them of their detention under powers contained in the Immigration Act 1971. However, whilst in police custody, the custody officer has a general responsibility for the welfare and security of persons held in police cells.

When a person is held by the police on behalf of another agency, the custody officer has a discretion on visits which may be made to the person taking account of any concerns about potential dangers either to the detained person or to others.

My hon. Friend will be aware that I supported his request to visit Charles street Police Station and see his constituent. I am writing to the Chief Constable seeking an explanation and I will write to my hon. Friend in due course.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines exist for the police in respect of the removal of illegal immigrants. [13979]

Mr. Michael: Home Office Circular 38/1995 Police and Immigration Service Joint Enquiries contains guidance for the chief officer of police. It draws attention to the recommendations contained in the Joint Review of Procedures in Immigration Removal Cases, which was completed by senior officers of the Metropolitan Police and the Immigration Service in January 1994, and in which the Association of Chief Police Officers also participated. Additionally the circular gives broad guidance to the police on the conduct of immigration inquiries.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many removals to other countries of illegal immigrants his Department has authorised since 1 May. [14007]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The number of illegal entrants removed from the United Kingdom, including voluntary departures after illegal entry action had been initiated, between 1 May 1997 and 30 September 1997 was 2,015. This does not include persons removed as a result of deportation action or under port refusal procedures.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers and those of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, of 27 October Official Report, column 572, which articles of the Dublin convention 1991 (a) negate the terms of the Asylum Act 1996 and (b) make it more complex and more difficult to implement the bi-lateral agreement that allows the United Kingdom to return economic migrants to France. [13702]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Dublin Convention provides criteria for determining which member state should consider an asylum application made in the European Union and procedures for transferring applicants between member states. Where another member state accepts that it is responsible for an application made in the United Kingdom, the Secretary of State can refuse and remove the applicant to that State, making use, where appropriate, of the provisions of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 concerning safe third country asylum cases. As a matter of international law, we are unable to remove asylum seekers to European Union member states on safe third country grounds other than in accordance with the Dublin Convention.

The readmission agreement we have with France explicitly provides for its provisions to be superseded by the Dublin Convention in so far as they apply to asylum seekers. It remains possible to return persons to France under the readmission agreement where they are not asylum seekers and do not meet the requirements of the Immigration Rules.

Senior Police Officers (Leicestershire)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to improve the out-of-hours service of the Chief Constable, Deputy Chief Constable and Assistant Chief Constable of Leicestershire. [13929]

Mr. Michael: The out-of-hours service of the Chief Constable, Deputy Chief Constable and Assistant Chief Constable of Leicestershire is an operational matter for the police.

Procurement Exhibition

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police and Ministry of Defence police costs associated with the recent contingency and operational procurement exhibition held at Farnborough Aerospace indicating if these costs were recovered from the exhibition organiser. [14403]

Mr. Michael: I understand from the Chief Constable of Hampshire that the cost of policing around the Farnborough Aerodrome was £53,550. As Hampshire Constabulary policing commitment lay outside of the aerodrome site no charge was made by them.

The additional Ministry of Defence Police costs incurred by the recent Contingency and Operational Procurement Exhibition are a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence. I have asked him to write to you on those aspects of your Question which relate to his responsibilities.

Airports (Immigration Staff)

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances Her Majesty's immigration service is permitted to waive the requirement to provide staff at all United Kingdom airport terminals. [14251]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is not a requirement of the Immigration Act 1971 for immigration officers to be present at an airport terminal building. The Act provides for the Secretary of State to designate control areas for the embarkation and disembarkation of passengers in any port and for the port operator to take all reasonable steps to secure that notified conditions and restrictions which apply to a designated area are observed.

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the United Kingdom airports at which Her Majesty's immigration staff are employed, together with the number of immigration officers employed at each. [14250]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The details requested are set out below.

Port	Number of immigration officers on 1 October 1997
Gatwick North	132.7
Gatwick South	135.4
Heathrow Terminal 1	147.2
Heathrow Terminal 2	160.7
Heathrow Terminal 3	243.7
Heathrow Terminal 4	157.2
Brize Norton	3
Aberdeen	5.3
Belfast	5.6

Mildenhall	3
Southend	1
Stansted	47.6

Port	Number of immigration officers on 1 October 1997
London City	13.1
Cambridge	1
Bournemouth	4
Bristol	10

In the above table there are certain offices which cover both seaports and airports. Immigration officers also attend other airports as necessary.

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used to determine the number of Her Majesty's immigration staff employed at each of the United Kingdom's airports. [14249]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The deployment of Immigration Service operational staff at airports is determined by a number of factors. These include the pattern and timing of flight movements, the volume and nature of passenger traffic together with other control demands such as clandestine entry and asylum casework.

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of Her Majesty's immigration service costs arising from duties undertaken at United Kingdom airports is charged to airports; and what proportion is borne by public funds. [14248]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The cost of staffing the immigration control at both ports and airports in the United Kingdom, in accordance with the requirements laid down by the Secretary of State, is met entirely from public funds.

The Immigration Service charges for the provision of additional immigration services under section 9(4) of the Immigration Act 1988. The total receipts generated by these services for 1997–98 are expected to make up about 3.5 per cent. of the resources available to the Immigration Service Ports Directorate. I am unable to provide a disaggregation of the proportion of receipts between airports and other locations because to do so would risk breaching commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to improve the out-of-hours service of the immigration office at East Midlands airport. [13928]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The immigration office at East Midlands airport is staffed 24 hours a day. The uneven pattern of passenger arrivals means that there are times when only one immigration officer is required on duty. However, when that officer is unable to answer telephone calls immediately because of operational duties away from the office an answerphone service is provided. I do not have any plans to change this arrangement, which generally works well.

Immigration and Nationality Inquiry Desk

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many personal callers there were to the public inquiry desk at each branch of the immigration and nationality department on 1 October. [14241]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 1 October, the number of applicants at the public enquiry offices of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate was:

	Number
Belfast	20
Birmingham	122
Croydon Public Enquiry Office	884
Croydon Asylum Screening Unit	241
Glasgow	62
Liverpool	52

Police Discipline

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been (a) cautioned, (b) dismissed and (c) charged for inappropriate behaviour while on duty, listing in each case the (i) rule breached and (ii) police force involved. [14438]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The information available, covering the period April 1996 to March 1997, is contained in the table below. Figures relate to disciplinary cases which result in a punishment being awarded—they do not include those in which police officers were charged but found not guilty or the charges not pursued. Information on the rule breached, and whether the offence was committed whilst the officer was on or off duty is not collected centrally.

Party Conferences (Security)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of security arrangements for each party political conference held in 1997; and what was such expenditure in each of the preceding three years. [13084]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The information requested is set out in the table. In 1996, Dorset Police was given £1.5 million, and this year Lancashire Constabulary and Sussex Police were each given £750,000 in extra Government funding as a contribution towards the additional costs of safeguarding national security at Party conferences in their area.

Cost of policing Party Conferences

[1] Estimate.

[2] Lancashire Constabulary and Sussex Police are only able to provide additional costs which are essentially overtime, transport and accommodation costs.

In addition, some security expenditure incurred by the political parties on the advice of the police can be recovered from the Home Office in accordance with section 170 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994. The reimbursed costs are set out in the table:

Year	Conservative Party	Labour Party
1994	463,165	153,449
1995	533,392	65,000
1996	554,806	528,773
1997	n/a	n/a

n/a = not available.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints were made concerning security arrangements at each party conference. [13085]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 6 November]: Fourteen written complaints were made in relation to the security arrangements at the Labour Party conference in Brighton this year. I am not aware of any complaints made in relation to security at the Conservative or Liberal Democrat party conferences.

Animal Experiments

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on developments concerning the use of animals in scientific procedures. [14902]

Mr. George Howarth: My noble Friend made an announcement yesterday and a copy of a supplementary note to my right hon. Friend's response to the Animal Procedures Committee's interim report on its review of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 was placed in the Library.

Law on Disclosure

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the law on disclosure; and if he will make a statement. [12645]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The new disclosure provisions introduced by the Criminal Procedure and Investigation Act 1996 came into effect on 1 April 1997 but only apply to criminal proceedings arising from investigations begun on or after that date. Therefore, cases subject to the new procedures have only been coming before the courts in the last three or four months. I understand that the Crown Prosecution Service is in the process of undertaking its own evaluation of the new provisions, which it expects to complete early next year. In the light of that exercise, I will assess the need for a further evaluation of the provisions.

Security Screening (Hotels)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to ensure that security screening of hotel and boarding house guests does not discriminate against those of Irish origin. [13086]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The basis for any inquiries made by the police in the course of their duties is an operational matter for the chief constable concerned. It is open to anyone who considers that he has been dealt with improperly to make a complaint to the chief constable. If the complainant is not satisfied with the response he receives, he may refer the matter to the Police Complaints Authority.

Samia Batol Shah

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Bradford, North of 5 September, 1 October and 18 October concerning the case of Samia Batol Shah, reference PO5094/97. [14735]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I replied to my hon. Friend on 5 November.

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the nature and value of contracts his Department has entered into and (b) discussions ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14952]

Mr. Straw: There is no record of the Home Office entering into any contracts, or having discussions with, the Monitor Consultancy during the period in question.

Fire Service

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 842, concerning Fire Service attendance times, from what point attendance times are calculated. [14924]

Mr. George Howarth: Guidance issued by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Fire Services requests brigades to start measuring attendance times from the time of assignment of fire appliances by the brigade's control (the point at which the send button is pressed by the control operator).

Greater London Authority

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the hours during which polling stations in London will be open for electors during the London local government elections and referendum in May 1998. [14775]

Mr. George Howarth: The hours of polling at the London borough local elections on 7 May 1998 will be between 08.00 am and 09.00 pm at night. The Government intend to provide for polling for the referendum on the Greater London Authority also to be held on that day. The polling hours for the referendum will be the same as those for the London borough local elections.

Polling Stations (Schools)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many schools were (a) closed and (b) part-closed for use as polling stations on 1 May; and how many and what percentage of pupils were affected. [14678]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not collected centrally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Lone Parents

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the control groups operating to measure the effect of her New Deal for Lone Parents scheme contain lone parents who are not taking part in the scheme. [14686]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The New Deal for Lone Parents has been introduced in eight initial phase areas. Lone parents whose youngest child is at school are invited for interviews with their personal advisers who provide "better-off" calculations and individually tailored advice. Lone parents with pre-school children can volunteer for the New Deal.

Measurement of the effects of the New Deal for Lone Parents will rely on control areas rather than control groups. The control areas closely match the New Deal areas. The New Deal for lone parents will be evaluated by a consortium led by Social and Community Planning Research, an independent research institute together with the Institute of Employment Relations at Warwick University and the university of Bath. The impact of the scheme will be measured by comparing outcomes for lone parents in the New Deal areas with the outcomes for a similar, but geographically separate group of lone parents in the control areas. None of the lone parents in the control areas will be eligible for the New Deal.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what public funding was provided to the Gingerbread Group to participate in the press conference to launch the Moving Foward document. [14685]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Gingerbread did not receive any public funds for attending the press conference which launched the Moving Forward document.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are the detailed objectives for the control groups operating to measure the effect of her New Deal for Lone Parents scheme; and, if so, if she will list what these are; [14926]

(2) when she started the control groups to measure the effect of her New Deal for Lone Parents scheme, in each of the areas in which they are operating; [14928]

(3) what are the terms of reference for the control groups in the New Deal for Lone Parents scheme; and how they differ from those of the last Government's Parent Plus scheme; [14925]

(4) what is her definition of control group with respect to those being used in the New Deal for Lone Parents scheme; [14927]

(5) for what reasons the control groups in the New Deal for Lone Parents scheme did not start with the scheme itself. [14929]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The New Deal for Lone Parents will fulfil the Government's commitment to provide help to lone parents to get off benefit and into work. The programme has been introduced in the following eight Benefits Agency districts:

North Surrey
North Worcestershire
North Cheshire
Cambridgeshire
Warwickshire
Clyde Valley
Cardiff and Vale
Sheffield East

These areas have been carefully selected to represent areas of high, medium and low unemployment and to have typical caseloads of lone parents. Untypical areas were excluded.

The impact of the first phase of the New Deal for Lone Parents will be measured by comparing outcomes for lone parents in the New Deal areas with the outcomes for a similar, but geographically separate group of lone parents in control areas where the New Deal service is not yet available. These control areas are the Benefits Agency districts of:

Manchester Central
Glasgow Springburn and Cumbernauld
Blackburn and Accrington
Leicestershire North
Wiltshire
Buckinghamshire

Any additional movements into work in the New Deal areas over and above that which occurs in the control areas can be attributed to the New Deal itself, after allowing for changes in the local labour markets. The objectives of the control areas are, therefore, to provide a benchmark by which to assess the impact of the New Deal.

Administrative data for the control areas is being collected from the same date as that for the New Deal areas. This data will be collected for the duration of the New Deal and beyond. Carefully selected samples of lone parents in the control areas will be interviewed, as will lone parents in the New Deal areas.

The Parent Plus service would have only been available to half of the one parents on Income Support in each of the pilot areas. The impact of Parent Plus would have been measured by comparing movements into work amongst those offered the service (the action group) against those lone parents in the same area who were not offered the service (the control group).

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list (a) the nature and value of contracts her Department has entered into and (b) discussions ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14950]

Mr. Field: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

The Department of Social Security and its Executive Agencies has not entered into any contracts with Monitor Consultancy since 1993–94 (the latest for which information is available). Neither Ministers nor Departmental Officials have had discussions with them.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Land Rovers have been supplied to which Baltic states in each of the last five years; and if they have received ECGD cover. [13908]

Mrs. Beckett: From the data readily available, in the last five years ECGD has supported the following contracts, in relation to Land Rover Vehicles, to Baltic States:

(i) in 1994 the supply of 100 second hand Land Rovers value US$0.7 million to Latvia;

(ii) in 1996 the supply of 97 Land Rovers Defender Vehicles value £1.3 million to Lithuania

(iii) in 1997 the supply of 152 Land Rovers Defender/Discover Vehicles value £2.2 million to Lithuania

We do not have the total number of vehicles exported during these years.

Energy and Environmental Education

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans her Department has to review its relationship with non-governmental organisations involved in energy and environmental education. [12544]

Mr. Battle: I have no plans for such a review. My Department will play a full role in the Expert Panel on Sustainable Education announced by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 18 September 1997. This panel will strengthen partnership with key players such as non-governmental organisations in developing policy on environmental and energy education.

Business Links

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what costs have been saved by closures and amalgamations of business links since 1 May; and what are the total projected costs of these closures and amalgamations. [13519]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 October 1997]: There has been no programme of closures or amalgamations of Business Links since 1 May, although individual Business Links may have done so on an independent basis.

Business Links are tasked with preparing business plans from which I would expect efficiency savings to be made.

Plutonium

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations Her Majesty's Government made to the United States Government over the use of plutonium fuel on the recently launched NASA spaceship and the concern for environmental safety. [13663]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The recent launch by NASA was the start of the Cassini/Huygens mission to Saturn. The UK has contributed to ESA's Huygens probe which will land and make measurements on one of Saturn's moons. It is a fundamental priority for the UK that space activities are undertaken in a safe and responsible way. Neither NASA nor ESA underestimate the care required in handling plutonium and have gone to great lengths to ensure the safety of the power sources. I understand these safety measures include: the form of the plutonium—a type of ceramic, the way it is stored—divided into 18 independent units, and the multiple layers of materials preventing accidental release. Her Majesty's Government was satisfied the risk of environmental impact was reduced to an absolute minimum and sufficiently balanced by the valuable scientific data that will be gathered by the mission about the evolution of planets in the solar system and ultimately the Earth itself.

International Energy Systems Ltd.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what offers were received by BNFL Ltd. from companies interested in taking over or sharing in the work of International Energy Systems Ltd. [14069]

Mr. Battle: Commercial and operational matters affecting BNFL and its subsidiaries are of course a matter for the Company. However, I understand BNFL will be making contact with the hon. Member.

HEALTH

Fluoridation

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on fluoridation of drinking water indicating those local authority areas in which fluoride is currently added to water. [14392]

Ms Jowell: Some 5.5 million people in the United Kingdom receive water where the fluoride content has been artificially increased to a level of one part of fluoride per million of water. Local authority areas do not necessarily receive a discrete water supply, but the health authorities in England whose populations are wholly or partly served by fluoridation schemes are Bassetlaw, North Bedfordshire, Bromsgrove and Redditch, Birmingham Central, Birmingham East, Birmingham North, Birmingham South, Birmingham West, Coventry, Crewe, Dudley, Durham, North West Durham, Gateshead, Hartlepool, North Lincolnshire, South Lincolnshire, Newcastle, Northumberland, Sandwell, Scunthorpe, Solihull, Mid Staffordshire, South East Staffordshire, North Tyneside, North Warwickshire, South Warwickshire, Walsall, Worcester and Wolverhampton.

The Government are looking at options for the fluoridation programme and will make an announcement in due course.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities in England provide in vitro fertilisation; and what measures are being taken to tackle inequality of provision between health authorities. [14391]

Ms Jowell: Information on health authority funding of in vitro fertilisation is contained in the Report of the Fourth National Survey of National Health Service Funding of Infertility Services, produced by the College of Health on behalf of the National Infertility Awareness Campaign (published November 1996). Copies are available in the Library.

The Government are committed to tackling the issue of unexplained or unjustified variations in the service provided in different parts of the country. The forthcoming White Paper on replacing the National Health Service internal market and the commissioning process will be founded upon a number of key principles, one of which is fairness. The White Paper will propose a revised framework for monitoring performance which will include equity of access in relation to need.

Medical Procedures (Success Rate)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals he has to increase the percentage of NHS operations and other procedures which are successful. [14417]

Ms Jowell: The quality, effectiveness and outcomes of National Health Service services will be a paramount objective of the plans we will bring forward to replace the competitive, contract driven and bureaucratic internal market.

We have already made a clear commitment to put clinical quality at the heart of our plans for the NHS. The Priorities and Planning Guidance for the NHS for 1998–99 made clear that the effectiveness and quality of services is central to the purpose of the NHS. We have in development an integrated approach to improving the quality, effectiveness and outcomes of NHS care.

The law bringing into force the General Medical Council's professional performance procedures was implemented on 1 July 1997 and we will shortly be issuing guidance to the NHS on its role in these procedures.

The Chief Medical Officer has written to all Chief Executives and Medical Directors of NHS trusts asking them to ensure that they have effective procedures in place for doctors to report their concerns about the conduct, performance or health of medical colleagues. This builds on the General Medical Council's guidance in Duties of a Doctor which requires all doctors to:

> "act quickly to prevent patients from risk if you have good reason to believe you or a colleague may not be fit for practice".

We also welcome the new Safety and Efficacy Register of New Interventional Procedures, which is meant to help the clinical professions decide how to handle the safe introduction of developments in technology in surgery. Furthermore, the recently introduced reforms of higher specialist medical training, which includes the introduction of improved, more structured medical training programmes, will ultimately lead to improvements in the quality of the care provided to patients.

National Health Service Directorships

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent it is his policy that there should be a presumption that appointments of non-executive directors to NHS directorships should be made from candidates living within the trust's area; in what circumstances candidates from outside the area may be (a) shortlisted and (b) appointed; and if he will make a statement. [14733]

Mr. Milburn: Under the Government's new procedures candidates are expected to live in the area served by the trust involved. This will apply to all current postholders seeking reappointment as well as new candidates. Only in exceptional circumstances would we be prepared to depart from this stipulation. For example, where there are severe local recruitment problems; when a particularly strong candidate has demonstrated in some other way their commitment to the local community; or where there is someone living only just outside the core area served by the trust whom it might be sensible to appoint.

Nutrition (Schools)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the report by Professor James into food issues and schools which was prepared for his Department. [14770]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and I are meeting Professor James later this month to discuss his draft report on healthy active schools. A decision on how best to publicise his recommendations will be taken after discussion with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Children's Rights

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish an office of Children's Rights Commissioner. [14942]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have no plans to establish an office of Children's Rights Commissioner. During 1998 the Government will be preparing the Second United Kingdom Report to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child in accordance with the requirements of Article 44 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 1989. We will take into account possible advantages of such an Office and seek to assess progress in other countries where such an Office has been established.

Winter Mortality Rates

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the excess winter mortality rates in (a) Lancashire, (b) Cornwall, (c) Tyneside and (d) Suffolk for each of the last 10 years in terms of (i) excess numbers and (ii) percentages for (1) those aged 65 to 80 years, (2) those aged over 80 years, (3) single parent families, (4) people in receipt of income support, (5) people with disabilities and (6) others. [14259]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from John Fox to Mr. Nigel Evans, dated 7 November 1997:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to answer your recent question on excess winter deaths in Lancashire, Cornwall, Tyneside and Suffolk for each of the last 10 years. In his absence, I am replying as the Director of the Census, Population and Health Group.

The estimated numbers of excess deaths in each county during the last ten winters, based on the latest available data, are presented in the following table. The percentage of excess winter deaths among those aged 65 to 80 years and among those aged over 80 years are also given.

[1] Rounded to the nearest 10.

Excess winter deaths are defined as the number of deaths in the four months from December to March less the average of the numbers during the preceding autumn (August to November) and the following summer (April to July). The table gives the percentage of the excess attributable to each of the given age groups.

The mortality data collected by the ONS do not include information on whether the deceased was a single parent, in receipt of income support or disabled. It is therefore not possible to calculate the percentage of excess winter deaths among these groups.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Employment Service (Annual Report)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Employment Service annual report and accounts for 1996–97 will be laid before Parliament. [15308]

Mr. Blunkett: I have today laid before the House the Employment Service's Annual Report and Accounts for 1996–97 which give full details of performance in that operational year.

The Report notes that the Employment Service achieved some very significant successes in 1996–97. Most notably, the Service rose to the major challenges of successfully introducing the Jobseeker's Allowance and implementing the Labour Market System in the same operational year. Both were very large undertakings which required effective management and considerable investment in infrastructure, training and systems. The intensive effort which the ES had to devote to these two initiatives did result, however, in the Service not meeting a number of its job placing and other targets.

The Report notes that there has in addition been some misrecording of job placings and that performance for 1996–97 has been over-stated as a result. The causes lie in inconsistent application of ES job broking instructions and weaknesses in the performance validation process which are being tackled as a matter of priority. The ES Chief Executive has provided me with details of the urgent steps he has taken in this respect including issuing fresh and comprehensive instructions on the definitions of a submission and a placing, and the introduction of a new and more thorough performance validation system. Alleged cases of deliberate misrecording of placings are being investigated and appropriate disciplinary action will be considered against anyone found deliberately to have contravened the procedures.

The Comptroller and Auditor General in his comments on the Report notes that the Employment Service has taken swift and robust action to address this issue. The NAO and the Service have agreed that the NAO will undertake an annual validation of the Agency's performance measures and performance achieved, beginning in this current operational year. Further details of the action taken by the Employment Service are contained within the report.

It is important to note that the misrecording of placings has no effect on the unemployment count which is taken from the records of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance as shown by the Benefits Agency computer system.

The current review of the Employment Service targets which I announced to the House on 30 July will take these matters into account. I expect the Review to recommend by the end of the year a series of targets which reflect our new priorities, are fully achievable and which can be measured accurately.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 10 November 1997

PRIME MINISTER

Yemen

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what progress was made at the Commonwealth Conference on Yemen's application to join the Commonwealth; and when he estimates that Yemen will join the Commonwealth. [14985]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that I made to the House on 28 October, Official Report, column 714.

Former Prime Ministers (Private Offices)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the annual cost to public funds of maintaining the private offices of former Prime Ministers. [14986]

The Prime Minister: All former Prime Ministers are eligible to receive an allowance to assist them with the continuing heavy burden of office and secretarial costs arising from their special position in public life. The allowance is similar in purpose and amount to the parliamentary office costs allowance, but is paid in respect of public not parliamentary duties.

The maximum amount of the allowance available to former Prime Ministers during the current financial year is £47,568 plus £4,757 for contributions to pension schemes of members of staff whose salaries are paid from the allowance.

I do not think it right to disclose the amounts of this allowance claimed by individual former Prime Ministers, any more than the House discloses details of claims by Members under the office costs allowance.

European Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Ministers if he will ensure that Ministers make available to Parliament details of United Kingdom proposals for European Council meeting discussion in advance of council meetings held under the British presidency. [14710]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and hon. Friends will keep the House properly informed of their activities during the UK's presidency. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary will shortly be giving evidence before the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs on the UK's priorities and objectives for the presidency.

Focus Groups

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Prime Minister what use he makes of information from focus groups. [14835]

The Prime Minister: The Government, like their predecessor, monitor public opinion in a number of ways.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the organisations or persons who supply him with information collated from focus groups. [14836]

The Prime Minister: The Government monitor public opinion in a number of ways, using a number of different organisations.

Correspondence

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister when he will reply to the letters dated 12 June, 12 August and 20 October from Mr. Nicholas Bennett concerning a Labour member of Reading Borough Council and Berkshire County Council; and if he will publish his reply in the Official Report. [14749]

The Prime Minister: My office have replied.

TREASURY

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had or plans to have with his EU counterparts on the problems facing computer systems through the century date change; and if he will make a statement. [13153]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor has had no contacts with his EU colleagues directly about the problems facing computer systems thanks to the century date change.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate in cash terms in 1995–96 prices the reduction in central Government expenditure for 1997–98 and 1998–99 between the assumptions made in (a) the November 1996 Budget, (b) the July 1997 Budget and (c) the most recent assumption. [13190]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 October 1997]: The provision made in the last two Budgets for Central Government within the Control Total programmes in 1997–98 and 1998–99 in cash and in 1995–96 prices are set out below:

£ billions

	1996 FSBR		1997 FSBR
	Cash terms	1995–96 prices	Cash terms	1995–96 prices
1997–98	187.2	179.0	187.4	177.5
1998–99	191.4	179.5	192.6	177.5

The Government have not revised their economic assumptions since the July 1997 Budget.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of general Government expenditure in cash terms for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, using (i) current estimates, (ii) the estimates at the time of the July 1997 Budget and (ii) the estimates at the time of the November 1996 Budget. [13644]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The Government's estimates in cash terms of general government expenditure for 1997–98 and 1998–99 are set out in the table below:

Budget

£ billion

	1997–98	1998–99
July 1997	319	331
November 1996	319	327

The July 1997 figures are the current estimates for general government expenditure.

Income Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate for the number of people who would cease to pay income tax if the personal income tax allowance were raised to £10,000 per annum; [13247]

(2) what is his estimate of the cost of raising the personal income tax allowance to £10,000 per annum. [13248]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The estimated cost at 1997–98 income levels of increasing both the non-aged personal allowance and the aged personal allowance to £10,000 is £29 billion. This would take 9.8 million taxpayers out of income tax.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is the policy of the Government to adhere to the existing control total for public expenditure for 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [13287]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The Government are firmly committed to the Control Total for 1998–99.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas (Correspondence)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what, at 1 October, was the average time it took for the migration and visas correspondence unit to deal with an hon. Member's inquiry; and how many outstanding cases there were on 1 October. [14222]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies that I gave to him on 4 November, Official Report, columns 166-67, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney) on 3 November, Official Report, column 11.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the United Nations Security Council Presidential Statement of 29 October on Iraq. [14711]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A copy of the United Nations Security Council Presidential Statement on 29 October on Iraq has been placed in the libraries of the House.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of the five most recent reports to the United Nations Security Council of the UNISCOM inspection and verification mission in Iraq. [14713]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A copy of the five most recent reports submitted by the Executive Chairman of the UN Special Commission to the UN has been placed in the libraries of the House.

Bananas

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to encourage (a) the World Trade Organisation members and (b) EU members states to accommodate the interests of the ACP banana producers and facilitate the diversification of their economies; over what time scale; and if he will make a statement. [14997]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are working actively on the implication of the WTO findings on the EC banana regime. We are in close touch with the Commission in Brussels, which has responsibility for devising a WTO compatible response on behalf of the Community. They will be discussing the implications with our traditional banana suppliers and other interested parties such as the US. At the CHOGM in Edinburgh last month, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary made clear to Caribbean leaders that the UK will play a major role in devising new banana import arrangements. We want to ensure Commonwealth and other ACP banana producers have continuing access to the EU banana market. New arrangements are likely to come into effect in early 1999.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what transitional arrangements the Government plan to make to reduce the impact of the recent World Trade Organisation ruling on Commonwealth banana producers; and if he will make a statement. [14996]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In the Edinburgh Economic Declaration agreed at CHOGM last month, Heads of Government resolved to encourage the EU and WTO members to accommodate the legitimate interests of the ACP banana producers and facilitate the diversification of their economies. The UK has for a number of years been promoting good commercial practice and competitiveness among those Commonwealth banana producers likely to be most affected by the WTO ruling, principally the Windward Islands. The UK-funded Cargill report outlined the steps necessary to restructure and modernise their banana industries and was agreed with the Windwards Governments in 1995. Caribbean Governments also receive large allocations of EC aid to improve competitiveness, assist economic diversification and develop social safety nets.

We are also liaising with the Commission in Brussels, which has the principal responsibility for the Community's response to the WTO ruling. As leading advocates of Caribbean interests we want to ensure the new regime is both WTO compatible and meets our obligations to our traditional banana suppliers in the Caribbean.

EU Presidency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the statements he has made outside Parliament on the proposed priorities for the United Kingdom presidency of the European Union since 1 May; and if he will place copies of each in the Library. [14719]

Mr. Doug Henderson: On 3 November, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary spoke to the Institute for European Affairs in Dublin about the Government's priorities for the UK's forthcoming Presidency of the European Union. A copy has been placed in the libraries of the House. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary looks forward to giving evidence on this same subject to the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs on 1 December—in advance of which he will be submitting a Memorandum—and to the House's debate on European Affairs later that month which may also choose to cover the subject.

Kenya

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 824, on human rights in Kenya, what action he plans to take to follow up his meeting with the Kenyan Foreign Minister. [15021]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We shall maintain a vigorous dialogue with the Kenyan Government on human rights issues through our High Commissioner in Nairobi and at Ministerial level when the occasion arises.

Chechnya

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the actions taken by his Department to obtain the release of Camilla Carr and Jon James, presently held by kidnappers in Chechnya. [14800]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Since 3 July, when Jon James and Camilla Carr were kidnapped, their employers and we have sought to establish the facts and are working hard for their release. As their families know, the Prime Minister spoke to President Yeltsin about the couple last month. We are also in touch with the Chechen authorities, but the ability of the Russian or, indeed, any government to help in this troubled region is limited. There has been a spate of kidnappings in and around Chechnya in recent months, which may be criminally inspired: one reason why our strong consular advice is that British citizens should not travel to Chechnya.

Algeria

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department will take steps to persuade the Government of Algeria to allow an investigation of events in their country by the United Nations rapporteur on extrajudicial summary and arbitrary executions. [14765]

Mr. Fatchett: While a solution to the serious problems in Algeria must come from the Algerians themselves, we condemn unreservedly the violence which has prevailed there. In our regular contact with the Algeria authorities, we encourage Algeria's democratisation process. As part of our discussions, we have encouraged them to accept the proposed visit by the United Nations Rapporteur on Extrajudicial Summary and Arbitrary Executions and will continue to do so.

European Courts

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what challenges the United Kingdom Government have made to other member states' nominations to judicial positions within (a) the European Court of Justice and (b) the European Court of Human Rights in the last five years. [15023]

Mr. Doug Henderson: (a) None. Judicial appointments to the European Court of Justice are made by common accord of the governments of the Member States.

(b) Judges are elected to the European Court of Human Rights by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. We have not previously challenged judicial nominations, nor is there any formal procedure for doing so. An informal procedure has now been agreed, at our suggestion, for the examination of prospective candidatures for the new Protocol ll Court of Human Rights.

Bosnia

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions the Government propose to take to effect the arrest of war criminals in Bosnia before the withdrawal of IFOR. [14768]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We demand that the responsible authorities surrender indictees to The Hague. We are not prepared to speculate on possible alternative action.

GCHQ

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to announce a decision on the possible relocation of GCHQ facilities; and if he will make a statement. [14905]

Mr. Robin Cook: The invitation to tender for GCHQ's accommodation Private Finance Initiative (PFI) project has been issued to four private sector consortia. The tender responses are expected in Spring 1998 and will be subject to a process of detailed evaluation and post-tender negotiations. The complexities of this process make it difficult to predict when an announcement will be made relating to the possible relocation of GCHQ facilities, but it is not expected that it will be before summer 1998.

International Criminal Court

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proceedings at the Preparatory Committee for the International Criminal Court held in August indicating the issues remaining to be decided at the Plenary Conference in 1998. [14769]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The August 1997 session of the Preparatory Committee considered mechanisms for triggering action by the Court, the Court's procedures, and the relationship between the Court and national criminal justice systems. Progress was made towards producing an agreed text on all these issues and in particular on the last. Further discussion will be possible at the two remaining sessions of the Preparatory Committee, but many matters will be left for decision at the Diplomatic Conference next year.

Refugees and Asylum Seekers

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the concept of burden sharing in relation to refugees and asylum seekers as introduced by the Amsterdam treaty. [14746]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Under Article 73k(2)(b) of the Treaty establishing the European Community as introduced by the Treaty of Amsterdam, the Council is to adopt measures promoting a balance of effort between Member States in receiving and bearing the consequences of receiving refugees and displaced persons. Decisions will be by unanimity. These measures will not be binding on the UK unless it opts in to them.

EU Legislation (Gibraltar)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all EU legislation agreed within the last 15 years as a result of Her Majesty's Government agreeing to Spanish requests to exclude Gibraltar. [14676]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This information is not readily available. But the main legislative items falling within the category to which my hon. Friend refers are five EC Measures relating to the Single Market in aviation, which have been agreed by the EU since 1987 subject to the suspension of their application to Gibraltar airport.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all current EU proposals that are blocked because of Spanish insistence that Gibraltar be excluded. [14671]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The main recent items on which no agreement has been reached are the draft External Frontiers Convention, the draft Winding-Up Directive and the draft Airport Statistics Regulation.

EU (Police and Judiciary)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what provisions of the Amsterdam treaty apply to the operations of police and judicial authorities from one member state in the territory of another; and if he will make a statement. [14743]

Mr. Doug Henderson: New Article K.4 of the Treaty on European Union, as introduced by the Treaty of Amsterdam, provides that the Council shall lay down the conditions and limitations under which the competent authorities referred to in Articles K.2 and K.3 may operate in the territory of another Member State in liaison and in agreement with the authorities of that state. By virtue of Article K.6, the Council must act by unanimity.

EU Territory

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the territorial definition of the European Union. [14750]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As the European Union is not a State it has, itself, no territory, as distinct from the Member States.

EU Commissioners

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the President of the European Commission is required, under the Amsterdam treaty, to give reasons for rejecting the nomination for Commissioner of any member state; and if he will make a statement. [14745]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There is no such requirement under the Treaty of Amsterdam. Article 158(2) of the Treaty establishing the European Community as amended by the Treaty of Amsterdam provides for future members of the European Commission to be nominated by the Governments of the member states "by common accord" with the nominee for President. This will inevitably entail dialogue between the nominee for President and the Governments of the member states.

Amsterdam Treaty (Visas)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if decisions on the issuing procedures in respect of short-term visas will be made by co-decision under the treaty of Amsterdam; and if he will make a statement; [14744]

(2) if proposals to tighten the procedures for issuing visas would be subject to a veto in the European Parliament under the Amsterdam treaty. [14747]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Under new Articles 73j(2)(b)(ii) and 730 of the treaty establishing the European Community as introduced by the Treaty of Amsterdam, for a period of five years after the entry into force of the Treaty of Amsterdam the Council is to adopt measures, by unanimity, having consulted the European Parliament on the crossing of external borders. This will include procedures and conditions for issuing visas by Member States for intended stays of no more than three months. After a period of five years after the entry into force of the Treaty of Amsterdam, such measures are to be adopted by the council in accordance with the codecision procedure. Such measures will not be binding on the UK unless it opts in to them.

BBC World

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the total receipts, and for how many programmes or hours of television broadcasting, that the BBC World Service received from BBC World in each year since BBC World's inception. [14740]

Mr. Fatchett: The following sums were paid by BBC Worldwide (the BBC's commercial arm) to the World Service to fund the cost of provision of news output for BBC World:

Financial year	Payment (£)	World Service Output (hours per day)
1991–92	6,089,979	12
1992–93	7,133,000	12
1993–94	9,130,000	12
1994–95	15,646,715	[1]15
1995–96	[2]10,704,074	15
1996–97	10,650,000	15

[1] Average.
[2] The annual payment was reduced from 1995–96 onwards when BBC Worldwide took on the provision of the technical resource requirements (studios etc) for BBC World news directly: previously the cost of these had been reflected in the sums paid to the World Service.

WALES

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many beaches in Wales currently have been designated Blue Flag beaches; and if he will make a statement. [14091]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Nine Welsh beaches are currently in receipt of the prestigious Blue Flag awards. This is more than twice as many as Wales has received before. As part of the Green Sea Initiative there is a target of achieving 50 Blue Flags in Wales by the year 2000.

Health Care Providers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by health care provider, for each of the last four years, the number of contracts each health authority had in place, indicating how many of these had been referred for arbitration within the NHS region; and how many were left unsigned by (a) the provider and (b) the purchaser at the end of the year to which they applied, and, for 1997–98, by the end of October 1997. [14610]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information on the number of contracts between health authorities and trusts or on their status is not held centrally.

During the period 1 April 1993 to 30 March 1997 only one contract between a Welsh Health Authority and NHS trust went to arbitration. None are expected to go to arbitration in 1997–98.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Charles Haughey

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps her Department is taking to investigate the propriety of the payment made by Dunnes Stores, Bangor, through the late John Furze, to the former Taoiseach Charles Haughey; and if she will provide evidence to the tribunal of inquiry investigating such payments. [13022]

Mr. Ingram: The circumstances surrounding various payments allegedly made to Mr. Charles Haughey are at the centre of investigations being conducted by a Tribunal of Inquiry in the Republic of Ireland. No similar or other investigations have been instituted in Northern Ireland, neither has there been received any request for assistance to that Tribunal of Inquiry.

Environmental Protection Agency

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to establish an independent Environmental Protection Agency in Northern Ireland. [14074]

Mr. Paul Murphy: No steps have been taken to establish an Environmental Protection Agency in Northern Ireland.

The Environmental and Heritage Service, a Next Steps Agency within the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland was set up on 1 April 1996 to assume operational responsibility for environmental issues.

Electricity Prices

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the progress of discussions about the level of electricity prices in Northern Ireland. [14283]

Mr. Ingram: Electricity prices are coming down. Northern Ireland Electricity reduced tariffs form 1 April 1997 by an average 8 per cent. for domestic and up to 3 per cent. for industrial and commercial customers. The MMC review of NIE's price controls will have retrospective effect from 1 April 1997 and will lead to further tariff reductions of at least 6 per cent. for domestic and 2 per cent. for industrial and commercial customers. The precise details of the revised price controls are currently the subject of legal action. In addition, the Director General of Electricity Supply has secured voluntary agreements on lower generation costs at both Coolkeeragh and Belfast West power stations. He has announced his intention to refer the Ballylumford and Kilroot contracts to the MMC and, in the absence of voluntary agreement on these contracts, is likely to do so very shortly.

The Government are discussing with the Director General and NIE how best to use the £45 million balance of the £60 million support package for the future benefit of all electricity consumers.

Stormont

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to (a) remove and (b) relocate (i) statues and (ii) memorials in Parliament Buildings, Stormont. [14052]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Some items were removed from Parliament Buildings during refurbishment to a secure store for their protection. Consideration will be given to the appropriate relocation of these items in due course.

Telecommunication Masts

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will commission research into potential harmful effects of microwave radiation emitted from telecommunication masts. [14053]

Mr. Worthington: No. The National Radiological Protection Board advises Government on the risks to health of exposure to electromagnetic fields. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 3 November, Official Report, column 7, which details research in this area.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders her Department made during the summer adjournment. [14386]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 5 November, Official Report, column 216, by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of Stare for Northern Ireland if she will list (a) the nature and value of contracts her Department has entered into and (b) discussions ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14948]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 7 November 1997]: The Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments have had no contract with Monitor Consultancy.

Beef Cattle

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for the introduction of a beef cattle subsidy to be paid at slaughter. [14772]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 7 November 1997]: A beef deseasonalisation premium will be paid in Northern Ireland in 1998, as in 1997, on eligible steer cattle which are slaughtered between 1 January and 10 June 1998.

Mr. Andy Wood

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions she had with the Minister without Portfolio (a) in respect of her Office's information officer Mr. Andy Wood before he was replaced at his post and (b) in respect of identifying his replacement; and if she will make a statement. [14524]

Marjorie Mowlam: Before asking for Mr. Wood to be removed from the post of Director of the Northern Ireland Information Service I did not discuss his removal with my right hon. Friend the Minister without Portfolio. After Mr. Wood's removal, my right hon. Friend was one of a number of colleagues that I consulted about Mr. Wood's replacement.

On foot of those consultations I put in hand a review of the structures and working practices of the Northern Ireland Information Service. I have just received the report of that review, one consequence of which is that the Northern Ireland Office will shortly be advertising an open competition of the post of Director of the Northern Ireland Information Service.

SCOTLAND

Student Awards Agency

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up an inquiry into the administration of the Student Awards Agency for Scotland. [14292]

Mr. Wilson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Student Awards Agency for Scotland to provide a full report on the difficulties encountered by the Agency in processing student award applications timeously this year so that we can determine what measures need to be implemented to prevent a recurrence.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors underlie the delays in the payment of grants by the Student Awards Agency for the current academic year; and what steps he is taking to address the problem. [14291]

Mr. Wilson: A number of factors have combined to affect adversely the ability of the Student Awards Agency for Scotland to process awards within its normal timescale in the current academic year. Most of these flow from the introduction of a new awards processing system in April of this year. There were a larger number of initial problems encountered than had been anticipated and these, together with delays in converting data from the previous system, unfamiliarity with the new system, and the need to enter large volumes of 'standing' data in its first year of operation, resulted in a backlog of applications building up. The profile of receipt of applications is heavily concentrated into the months from May to September and it is extremely difficult for the Agency to recover from a backlog once one has developed. The new awards system has, however, performed well after the initial problems were overcome. It has proved resilient under intensive use and significant improvements in efficiency are expected to be realised in future years.

Scottish higher and further education institutions were provided with an advance of their block grant in recognition of the fact that their income from tuition fees in October would be less than they had reason to expect. This was also designed to enable institutions to offer short term assistance to those students in financial difficulties because of delays in receiving their grant cheques, and was in addition to the Access Funds which are normally used for this purpose. Meanwhile, the Agency was set a demanding target to clear the vast majority of the backlog by the end of October, which has largely been achieved. It is expected to be up to date with processing applications by the end of November.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for grants by students from Scotland to study at Scottish universities and colleges for the Session 1997–98 were received by the Student Awards Agency for Scotland (a) before the normal closing date and (b) after it; how many were processed and paid (i) by the beginning of the student term, (ii) by four weeks after the beginning of the term and (iii) at the latest count; and how many remain unpaid. [14293]

Mr. Wilson: The closing date for the receipt of undergraduate applications by the Student Awards Agency for Scotland in academic year 1997–98 is 31 January 1998 and it is not therefore a factor in the present situation. Students continuing a period of full-time education were, however, advised to apply by 15 May 1997 in order to ensure that any grant payable would be available at the start of the first term. New students are encouraged to apply as soon as they receive an unconditional offer of a place on a course.

Of the 71,436 applications received from continuing students up to 3 November 1997, 20,656 were received by 15 May. At the same date 40,434 applications had been received from new students. Applications are not attributed to a specific course at the point of receipt and term dates vary between institutions. The best estimate is that about 27,750 applications had been received four or more weeks before the start of the term, which is the normal period allowed for processing fully completed applications.

As at 3 November, 42,884 awards had been processed in sufficient time to allow any payment to be made at the beginning of the students' terms and a further 22,721 had been processed in time to allow any payment to be made by 4 weeks after the beginning of the term. A total of 90,217 applications had been processed and 28,927 had yet to be processed; many of the latter are likely to be "fees only" cases with no payment due to the student.

These figures cover all Scottish domiciled students eligible for support under the Students' Allowances Scheme and the Student Nursing and Midwifery Bursary Scheme rather than only those attending Scottish institutions. Detailed figures split by institutional location are not readily available.

EU Students (Tuition Fees)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he proposes to put in place to discover the incomes of the parents of EU students at Scottish universities so that they can be assessed for the students' contribution to their tuition fees. [14294]

Mr. Wilson: The student award application forms already have facilities for the collection of information on parental, spouse and student income, as required, and these will in future be used to collect the necessary information from EU students.

We are currently considering the nature of the documentation which will be required to support the information provided, and the most appropriate means of dealing with currency differences, to enable EU students' contributions to tuition costs to be assessed on the same basis as those of Scottish domiciled students. Detailed guidance on how this will work in practice will be available early in 1998.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Welfare

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria he plans to use in determining whether to suspend or revoke an authorisation issued under the Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997; and if he will make a statement. [13914]

Mr. Morley: A transporter can be removed from operating under a General Authorisation or a Specific Authorisation can be revoked or suspended in the event of repeated infringements against the Order or any one infringement which involves serious suffering to animals. These sanctions apply whether or not the infringement leads to a criminal conviction.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in how many cases he is currently considering suspension or revocation of an authorisation issued under the Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997; and if he will make a statement. [13915]

Mr. Morley: The Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997 came into force on 1 July this year, with the Specific Authorisation Scheme operational from 1 October. We have not yet had cause to revoke or suspend any authorisations, but we have made it clear we will not hesitate to use these powers wherever appropriate.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to alter the minimum values system under which horses, donkeys and ponies are prevented from being sent for slaughter abroad; and if he will make a statement. [13916]

Mr. Morley: I have no plans to alter the legislation which requires a minimum valuation to be provided for specified categories of equines before a welfare export licence is issued.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that exported animals receive (a) a mid-journey break and (b) a 24-hour break once they have left the UK when such breaks are required by directive 95/29/EC; and if he will make a statement. [13920]

Mr. Morley: Enforcement of the rest period requirements of EU Directive 95/29 is the responsibility of the authorities of the member state in which a rest is required to take place. For their part, the Government ensure that exporters plan journeys in accordance with the EU rules, making such arrangements for rest periods as are required. We will not hesitate to use the sanctions provided by the Directive against transporters who are shown to have made false declarations about the journeys they have undertaken.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the costs to his Department of monitoring and enforcing the terms of the common agricultural policy. [14429]

Mr. Rooker: Separate figures for the costs of monitoring and enforcing the Common Agriculture Policy (CAP) are not available. Such costs form part of the overall administration costs of seeking to implement CAP obligations efficiently. These costs are set out in the Departmental Report 1997 (CM3604) of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Intervention Board.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Human Rights

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the President of the Council what her timetable will be for establishing a Parliamentary Committee on Human Rights. [14759]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Government intend to take into account what is said during the passage of the Human Rights Bill before deciding what form of parliamentary committee and terms of reference to recommend.

Mail Services

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what was the amount of money paid to the management consultants for their study and advice on trying to improve the flow of mail (a) internally and (b) through the Royal Mail to hon. Members. [15075]

Mrs. Roe: The consultancy was let following a competitive tender. The cost is commercially confidential.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what problems have been identified in the delivery of internal and external mail to, and within, the Palace of Westminster since the recent changes; and if she will make a statement on measures that will be taken to improve the system. [15074]

Mrs. Roe: At its meeting on 4 November the Administration Committee raised with the Serjeant at Arms certain problems with the new postal arrangements that had been brought to its attention by hon. Members. It was agreed that there had been some initial difficulties, but my Committee does support the new initiative, and considers that once the identified problems are remedied a more efficient service should result. It was reported to the Committee that there had been some industrial action by Royal Mail staff in Essex, and this may well have affected deliveries adversely in my hon. Friend's and other hon. Members' constituencies in this region.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what was the total cost of implementing the recent changes to the internal and external mail systems in the Palace of Westminster. [15076]

Mrs. Roe: The total works and equipment costs to date borne by the House Authorities are £45,096 excluding VAT. Costs borne by Royal Mail are not available.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what plans the Committee has to seek an assessment of the changes to the mail system made by the Department of the Serjeant at Arms; and if she will make a statement. [15077]

Mrs. Roe: A review of the changes will be carried out once the new system has been successfully settled in, and the result will be reported to the Committee for its consideration.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hawk Aircraft (Indonesia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will state the value of the export credits extended as part of the 1996 deal to supply Hawk aircraft to Indonesia, (a) in absolute terms and (b) as a percentage of the value of the arms deal with Indonesia. [12584]

Mrs. Beckett: The ECGD loan in support of the supply of Hawk aircraft amounted to £280 million. ECGD's support for this transaction amounted to 87 per cent. of the total support it provided for defence business with Indonesia in 1995–96.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders her Department made during the summer adjournment. [14388]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 3 November, Official Report, columns 43–44, and also to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 5 November, Official Report column 216.

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average time taken by her Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13960]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 4 November 1997]: My Department has a target of answering 90 per cent. of correspondence from hon. Members within 10 working days. In addition I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 3 November 1997, Official Report, column 5. Figures for handling DTI correspondence will be published in due course.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response she has made to the proposal of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux for a public-private partnership to support its Cabinet 2000 project; and if she will make a statement. [14475]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: NACAB has put proposals to the DTI for additional funding as part of the grant-in-aid we provide each year to finance part of the Cabinet 2000 project. It is itself seeking separate funding from the corporate sector, from its member bureaux and from other potential sponsors such as the National Lotteries Charities Board. The bid for additional funds from my Department is being considered as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Holocaust (Confiscated Funds)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects the work identifying confiscated funds deposited by victims of the holocaust to be completed; and if she will make a statement. [14485]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I have announced, 31 July, Official Report, column 641, that the Government have set in train a research project to examine papers relevant to the Trading with the Enemy legislation under which the property of residents of enemy countries was confiscated during the Second World War. The project, which has been co-ordinated by the FCO in close partnership with the DTI is making good progress, but is not yet complete. As previously announced, a report of the findings will be published as soon as possible.

River Wear (Quays)

Mr. Etherington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many deep water quays on the River Wear are currently leased to (a) NESL/British Shipbuilders and (b) Tyne and Wear Development corporation; what is the present state of repair of each quay; what is the remaining term of each lease; and if she will make a statement. [14682]

Mr. Battle: This Department does not lease any land or quays to either British Shipbuilders or the Tyne and Wear Development Corporation.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the policy of her Department on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if she will make a statement. [13264]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The Department has sought external advice on tax matters in order properly to carry out its role (e.g. in relation to privatisation) but not for tax avoidance purposes.

Lookalike Products

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs will meet the British Brands Group to discuss lookalike products. [14618]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The British Brands Group has made its views clear to me in writing on the question of lookalike products. I have no plans to meet representatives of the group at this time.

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list those towns in the west midlands region which have undergone street trenching by cable television companies. [14727]

Mr. Roger Levitt

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will make a statement on the application to extradite Mr. Roger Levitt from the United States of America; [14741]

(2) if she will make a statement on the advice given by her Department to the New York judge considering the application to extradite Mr. Roger Levitt; and if she will make a statement [14742]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Mr. Roger Levitt is charged with an offence of making a false statement contrary to Section 451 of the Companies Act 1985. Acting on advice from independent counsel my Department submitted an extradition request to the United States of America in June 1997 through the Home Office.

It was for the District Attorney in New York to make representations to the New York judge considering the application. In doing so he made reference to advice from my Department about the facts of the case, about submissions made on Mr. Levitt's behalf to that judge and about the likely position in relation to bail in the UK in the event of Mr. Levitt's return.

The Divisional Court granted leave on 31 October from Mr. Levitt to apply for Judicial Review of the decision to request Mr. Levitt's extradition, and the request for such extradition.

In the light of arguments presented on behalf of Mr. Levitt my Department has reviewed the decision to request Mr. Levitt's extradition and has concluded that the extradition request should not be maintained. Accordingly it will be withdrawn. Warrants remain open in the UK for Mr. Levitt's arrest in connection both with the Section 451 offence and on a charge of breaching a company director disqualification order.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Radio Stations (West Midlands)

12. Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many broadcasting licences have been granted by the Radio Authority to radio stations in the west midlands since September 1996; and how many of these were granted to community radio stations. [13438]

Mr. Fisher: Since September 1996 the Radio Authority has granted one independent local radio licence in the West Midlands. The winning application, from 107.7 the Wolf, proposes a programme format dedicated to the specific needs of the community.

National Lottery

13. Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will review the accessibility of lottery funding to bids for children's play initiatives; and if he will make a statement. [13439]

Mr. Chris Smith: In the White Paper, "The People's Lottery", I made it clear that we are particularly committed to the development of children's play. I am currently discussing with the Lottery distributors how we can best ensure that Lottery funding for it is more easily accessible.

15. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what criteria will be applied to consideration of lottery bids which include an estimate of revenue funding to ensure that successful existing institutions remain viable. [13442]

Mr. Chris Smith: It is for distributors to determine the detailed criteria for awards. For capital schemes, they may provide a revenue grant or an endowment to cover the costs of a project or to ensure its completion. We are looking at this area as part of the review of distribution announced in the White Paper, "The People's Lottery".

17. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has for allocating national lottery money to health-related projects. [13444]

19. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has for allocating lottery money to health-related projects. [13446]

25. Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has for allocating national lottery money to health-related projects. [13452]

Mr. Chris Smith: In the White Paper, "The People's Lottery", I announced the creation of a new good cause encompassing health, education and the environment. We want to enable people to improve their health and well-being, especially in the most deprived areas of the country. We therefore aim to establish a core network of healthy living centres, supported by the lottery, by 2001.

23. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he takes to ensure a reasonable balance of lottery grants for national, regional and local projects; and if he will make a statement. [13450]

Mr. Chris Smith: In the White Paper, "The People's Lottery", I announced our intention to ensure that Lottery money is spent according to a strategy drawn up in the light of need across all regions and parts of the country and between different groups in society. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has already announced a pilot scheme where some distributors will work together on small community grants in Scotland. We hope to see this kind of approach extended where appropriate as soon as possible.

Eastern Arts Board

14. Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to meet the Chair and Director of the Eastern Arts Board to discuss the development of the arts in their region. [13440]

Mr. Fisher: I met the Chairman and Chief Executive of the Eastern Arts Board during my visit to Cambridge on 7 October. I was delighted to learn of the high quality of artistic activity in the region and was impressed with the commitment of Eastern Arts Board to the arts in the area.

Industrial Heritage

16. Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the importance he attaches to the role of museums in preserving the country's industrial heritage. [13443]

Mr. Fisher: The industrial heritage is of immense importance to our understanding both of the past and the present. Museums have a crucial role to play in its preservation and interpretation.

UEFA Cup

18. Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State of Culture, Media and Sport if he has raised with the European Commission the issue of UEFA debarring the winner of the Coca-Cola cup from participating in the UEFA Cup. [13445]

Mr. Banks: This is a matter for the Football Authorities and I understand the Football League is pursuing it with the European Commission. I share some of the concerns expressed and will be following developments with interest.

Film Industry

20. Mr. Dennis Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress he is making in increasing the figures of British cinema audiences watching British films. [13447]

Mr. Tom Clarke: British films are enjoying a very successful year and we hope to build on that success. We have established an all-industry working group, headed by myself, and Mr. Stewart Till, Head of PolyGram Filmed Entertainment, with the aim of doubling the domestic market share for British films. I expect the working group to report in February 1998.

Jazz

21. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what role he plans for the Arts Council of England in developing audiences for jazz. [13448]

Mr. Fisher: Jazz is an art form without boundaries and with very many ardent supporters, including myself. The Arts Council of England published a jazz policy document last November. All the Council's funding for jazz is designed to develop and build new audiences; the Government agree that the development of audiences in all art forms is a high priority.

Millennium Projects

22. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much has been allocated to date by the Millennium Commission to projects to mark the millennium. [13449]

Mr. Chris Smith: Since its first grant announcement two years ago, the Millennium Commission has awarded a total of £1.015 billion to 114 projects on 2,720 sites, £19 million to 13 Award partners benefiting 8,000 individuals and £449 million to the New Millennium Experience at Greenwich.

Operetta

24. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his policy toward promoting provincial touring light operetta. [13451]

Mr. Fisher: My Department attaches a high priority to encouraging the widest possible range of touring artistic activity. The Arts Council of England is responsible for devising specific touring policies across artforms and by particular organisations. National companies, regional organisations and a range of specific bodies tour productions of light operetta around the country.

Arts (Accessibility)

26. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to make the arts more accessible to a wider range of people. [13453]

Mr. Chris Smith: Access is at the heart of my policies. I believe strongly that the public has a right to better access in return for the public funding which goes into the arts. I have made a number of specific proposals aimed at increasing access to the arts. These include plans to pilot open theatre nights and an Artscard scheme for young people. I will be announcing the results of our review of access to national museums and galleries within the next few weeks.

World Cup

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps the Government are taking to promote England's bid to host the World Cup in 2006. [14981]

Mr. Banks: I have just returned from accompanying an FA delegation to North and Central America to promote the World Cup bid. The trip was very successful and the Government will continue to offer all the support they can to the FA. I will shortly be writing to hon. Members giving full details and exhorting them to use every opportunity to back the bid.

British Academy of Sport

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recommendations he has received from the English Sports Council, the British Olympic Association and other sporting organisations about the location of the British Academy of Sport. [13737]

Mr. Banks: We have received a number of representations from sporting organisations about the location of the British Academy of Sport. We are currently considering the United Kingdom Sports Council's recommendations on the location and will make an announcement shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Irish Republic (British Subjects)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of British (a) subjects and (b) passport holders presently resident in the Irish Republic. [14050]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 3 November 1997]: There is no requirement for British subjects or those persons deemed never to have ceased to be British subjects to register or make themselves known to the British Embassy in Dublin. It is therefore impossible to estimate the number of British subjects resident in the Republic of Ireland. According to the Office for National Statistics, in 1995 there were approximately 50,000 British passport holders resident in the Republic of Ireland.

Surveillance Systems

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals have been made to his Department governing the use of evidence from CCTV cameras alone in securing criminal convictions; and if he will make a statement. [13762]

Mr. Michael: We have received no proposals which would affect the admissibility of evidence gathered by closed circuit television (CCTV) cameras. I have written to the hon. Member in response to this Question and his Question of 27 October, Official Report, column 568, to confirm that rumours earlier this year were based on a spurious press report that a European Directive on Data Protection could affect the admissibility of CCTV evidence. It will not have any such effect. I have placed a copy of my letter in the Library, together with a copy of information provided by the European Commission.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications by persons of independent means had been dealt with by the immigration and nationality department in 1997, as at 1 October. [14240]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what, at 1 October, was the average waiting time for consideration of applications for each of the divisions of the immigration and nationality directorate. [14223]

Prisoners

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held at each prison on 1 October; what is the design capacity of each prison; and what were the occupancy levels at 1 October as a percentage of that capacity. [14247]

Ms Quin: The number of prisoners held at each establishment in England and Wales on 1 October 1997 is listed in column one of the following table.

The Prison Service uses the concept of Certified Normal Accommodation (CNA) to define the uncrowded capacity of each establishment. For prisons built in recent years, this is equivalent to design capacity. The CNA measure can also be applied to older prisons, particularly those built in the last century, whose design capacity is no longer relevant because of significant building and/or modernisation work.

The CNA of each establishment is listed in column two of table 1. The occupancy level at each establishment is expressed as a percentage of CNA and can be found in column three of table 1.

Hampshire Police Authority

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what criteria he has used to determine which of the applications to be independent members of the Hampshire Police Authority he will approve; [14454]

(2) when the Hampshire Police Authority will receive confirmation of the Home Office's selections for new independent members of the Authority. [14455]

Mr. Michael: I have selected a shortlist of candidates to fill the vacancies for two independent members on the Hampshire Police Authority. My officials are writing to the Clerk to the Authority to inform him of the shortlisted candidates. The councillor and magistrate members of the Authority will then decide who from the shortlist should be appointed to the Authority.

The following criteria apply to the selection of all independent members:

As well as being of good character, independent members of police authorities should:

possess good communication skills;

be able to demonstrate the ability to challenge accepted views in a constructive way;

be able to represent a wide range of people in the community; have an understanding of their policing needs, and of the pressures and challenges which face the police themselves; have skills and experience which would broaden the expertise available to the authority.

Applications for appointment as an independent member of a police authority are invited from all eligible persons irrespective of ethnic origin, religious belief, gender, sexual orientation, disability or any other irrelevant factor.

CS Spray

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief of West Mercia Police on the incident at a house in Bicton Heath, Shrewsbury on Sunday 26 October which led to a five month old baby being taken to hospital as a result of the effects of CS spray; and if he will make a statement. [14489]

Mr. Michael: West Mercia Police are unaware of an infant being exposed to CS during this incident, in which a man was sprayed, and no complaint has been received in respect of any such allegation.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis indicating the amount of CS spray which the Commissioner has (a) purchased and (b) distributed; if all police officers receiving the spray will be trained in its use and in official guidelines relating to its use; what arrangements he has made for its storage, and inventory; and if he will make a statement. [14482]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner tells me that the Metropolitan Police has made an initial purchase of 28,200 operational CS incapacitant sprays which have been distributed to all Operational Command Units. Prior to being issued with CS spray, officers will undertake an initial four hour training course. Additionally, they will receive refresher training at least once a year which emphasises the importance of after care for persons sprayed.

CS sprays will be stored in specifically designed secure cabinets at the Operational Command Units. These cabinets are marked in accordance with fire and chemical storage regulations. A detailed record is maintained in relation to all devices. Each device is individually serial numbered and is issued against signature. The record of issue is then updated following discharge or disposal of the device.

Deaths in Police Custody

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the report on the circumstances of deaths in police custody; and if he will make a statement. [14484]

Mr. Michael: The report of the research by the Home Office Police Research Group into deaths in police custody from 1990 onwards is expected to be published at the turn of the year.

Elections (European Parliament)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will change the polling day for the next election for the European Parliament from a Thursday to a Sunday. [14677]

Mr. George Howarth: We do not think it would be right to change the polling day for the 1999 elections to the European Parliament, which will be held under a new regional list system.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number of prisoners in England and Wales held on remand for a period (a) up to three months, (b) over three months and up to six months, (c) over six months and up to 12 months and (d) over 12 months. [14546]

Ms Quin: The latest available provisional information for England and Wales is for 30 June 1997 and is given in the table. This information is also published in successive volumes of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (tables 2.3 and 2.4 of the 1996 edition, Cm 3732), copies of which are in the Library.

Remand prisoners in prisons in England and Wales by length of time since first reception[1] on 30 June 1997

Time since first remand	30 June 1997[2]
Up to and including three months	8,100
More than three months, up to and including six months	2,300
More than six months, up to and including 12 months	1,400
Over 12 months	300
Total	12,100

[1] Awaiting trial or sentence. Time since first reception on remand into a Prison Service establishment. This includes any intervening time spent on bail, but excludes time spent in police cells beforehand.

[2] Rounded provisional estimates.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the potential effects on remand prisoners' rights to a fair trial of arbitrary restrictions in the period leading up to and during their court appearances; what steps he has taken to ensure that the Prison Service is aware of this problem; and what special measures exist for the supervision monitoring of the treatment of prisoners in these circumstances. [13091]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 1997]: It is our policy that detention must not affect a person's right to a fair trial. In recognition of their special status, all unconvicted prisoners have extra privileges such as: the right to wear their own clothing; the right not to work; the right to extra visits, telephone calls and letters; and the right to continue their (legitimate) business activities. In addition, all prisons have legal aid officers and access to unlimited visits with their legal representative. Nearly all local prisons and remand centres have bail information schemes which assist prisoners to obtain bail if appropriate.

Both Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Prisons and the Prison Service Standards Audit, on their visits to local prisons, seek to ensure that the rights and privileges of unconvicted prisons are observed.

Mr. Ronnie Clark

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in the investigation of the death of Mr. Ronnie Clark in Wellingborough prison on 1 March; and if he will make a statement. [14486]

Ms Quin: The inquest into the death of Mr. Clarke was held on 9 October 1997 at Kettering Coroner's Court. The jury returned a unanimous open verdict. The Coroner made no criticism of either the actions of staff or Prison Service policy and procedure.

The Prison Service will consider the findings of the Coroner's investigation, together with its own inquiries, to examine carefully whether there are any lessons to be learned.

Prison Medical Staff

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison establishments in England and Wales provide an induction programme for staff joining the Prison Service from the national health service. [14505]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 1997]: All Prison Service establishments are expected to arrange a two-week induction programme under the guidance of a senior medical officer for all new entrant medical staff whether they are from the National Health Service or elsewhere.

In addition, new entrant doctors are expected to attend a week long centrally organised course within six months of joining the Prison Service.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison establishments in England and Wales are currently without a full or part-time medical officer. [14507]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 1997]: Fourteen establishments currently have vacancies for either full or part-time permanently appointed medical officers. Where appropriate medical cover at these establishments is augmented by the use of locum doctors. The Prison Service holds periodic recruitment drives to fill such vacancies, and the next one will be held shortly.

Danny McNamee

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the security classification of Gilbert (Danny) McNamee; and if this prisoner will be returned to a special secure unit prior to or during his forthcoming hearing at the Court of Appeal. [13090]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 1997]: Decisions concerning the security categorisation of Gilbert (Danny) McNamee, who is located in a Northern Ireland prison, are a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Should Mr. McNamee return to this jurisdiction for any reason, an assessment of his security category will be made in the light of security information available at the time.

Special Secure Units

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are presently detained in each special secure unit stating (a) the nature of the crimes for which they were convicted and (b) their security category status. [13089]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 1997]: There are seven prisoners, all Category A Exceptional Escape Risk prisoners, held in Whitemoor Special Secure Unit. Two were convicted of importation of drugs; two of customs evasion; and the remaining three prisoners of murder, conspiracy to murder and armed robbery, respectively. Full Sutton Special Secure Unit is temporarily closed and the accommodation which formed the Unit at Belmarsh now only holds Category A High Escape Risk prisoners and is not run as a Special Secure Unit.

Prisons (Drug Misuse)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of (a) doctors and (b) other staff, currently working in the Prison Service, have received any recognised training in dealing with drug misusers. [14506]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 1997]: Forty-eight out of 197 (25 per cent.) doctors working in the Prison Service have either a Diploma in Addictive Behaviour or Membership of the Royal College of Psychiatrists which will have included training in substance misuse. A further 26 doctors have started diploma level training during 1996–97.

Information is not centrally available in the form requested for other Prison Service staff. However, during 1996–97 over 230 health care staff attended a two day substance awareness course specifically designed for that purpose. In addition, 44 staff started diploma level training on substance misuse.

Life Sentences

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales are presently serving a life sentence; and what is the total annual cost of keeping these prisoners in custody. [14909]

Ms Quin: The latest available information is for 30 September 1997. On that date there were 3,794 life sentence prisoners in England and Wales. Information on life sentence prisoners is also published in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (Chapter 8 of the 1996 edition, Cm 3732), a copy of which is in the Library.

Information on the cost of prisoners by their type of sentence is not collected centrally. The average annual net operating cost of a prison place in 1996–97 was £24,775.

Human Rights

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further consideration he plans to give to the possible establishment of a Human Rights Commission. [14761]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have nothing to add at this stage to what we said about this in paragraph 3.8–3.12 of the White Paper "Rights Brought Home: The Human Rights Bill" (Cm 3782), which we published on 24 October, and during the Second Reading debate in Another Place on 3 November.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what functions a Parliamentary Committee on Human Rights would perform; and what powers would be vested in it. [14760]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have nothing to add at this stage to what we said about this in paragraph 3.6–3.7 of the White Paper "Rights Brought Home: The Human Rights Bill" (Cm 3782), which we published on 24 October, and during the Second Reading debate in Another Place on 3 November.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistical monitoring is undertaken in relation to the detention and imprisonment of asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement. [15174]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Statistical information on persons who had sought asylum and were detained as at specific points in time is available. A copy of the most recent statistics is attached.

Table 1: Number of people recorded as being detained[1,2] on 31 October 1997 who had sought asylum at some stage, by gender and immigration status

Gender	Port	Illegal entrants	Subject to deportation action	Total
Male	283	352	56	691
Female	33	14	2	49
Total	316	366	58	740

[1] Persons detained solely under the powers contained in Schedule 2 or 3 of the Immigration Act 1971.

[2] These figures include people who have been in detention for less than a month. Because of the delay in recording receptions into and releases from, detention and the large number of persons detained for a short period, the figures should be used with caution.

Freemasonry (Police and Judiciary)

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have to implement the Home Affairs Committee's recommendations on freemasonry in the police and judiciary (Third report, Session 1996–97, HC 192). [15283]

Mr. Michael: I will be writing to the Chairman of the Home Affairs Committee later this month with the Government's response to the Committee's recommendation on freemasonry in the police and judiciary. A copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

Firearms

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has made of (a) the likely total cost of the compensation scheme under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 and (b) the number of claims still to be made; [14811]

(2) what is the average time taken to settle claims for compensation under options (i) A and (ii) B under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997; and in each case, how many claims have been settled and what is the total value of the compensation paid to date. [14810]

Mr. Michael: Our estimate of the total cost of the compensation scheme remains £166 million. All claims had to have been made by the end of the surrender period on 30 September. Over 38,000 claims have been received in the Firearms Compensation Section from police forces. The average time to settle claims under both options A and B is currently 13 weeks.

To date, 15,000 payments have been made at a cost of over £20 million.

"The Mail on Sunday"

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to apply for the lifting of the injunction presently in force against The Mail on Sunday. [14696]

Mr. Straw: No. The injunction remains necessary in order to prevent the publication of any further material which could damage national security. I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bury, South (Mr. Lewis), 6 November 1997, Official Report, column 215.

Proposed Prisons

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment exercises his Department has conducted into the possibility of establishing an extra prison in the (a) West Chelmsford constituency and (b) mid Essex area during the past five years. [15072]

Ms Quin: During the last five years, the Prison Service has had brought to its attention a number of sites in Essex for the possible construction of new prisons. None of these were in the West Chelmsford constituency and, without exception, to date all have been considered unsuitable.

House of Lords Judgments

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to implement the House of Lords judgment in Regina v Secretary of State for the Home Department ex parte Pierson given on 24 July. [15640]

Mr. Straw: This judgment concerned the discretion of any holder of my office to increase a tariff once set for an adult convicted of murder. The majority of the House found that it is lawful for the Secretary of State to increase a tariff previously set, as set out in a reply given by my predecessor, the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) on 27 July 1993, Official Report, columns 863–65. However, one of that majority found that that statement did not purport to apply to a decision to increase a tariff set before 27 July 1993, and so a different majority found that the increase of the tariff in the Pierson case was unlawful.

So far as the procedures for setting and reviewing tariffs of adult murderers are concerned, I am continuing the practice of my predecessor, as described in his answers of 27 July 1993, Official Report, columns 861–64 and 7 December 1994, Official Report, columns 234–35. In particular, before setting tariff, I am continuing to take the advice of the trial judge and the Lord Chief Justice, informing the prisoner of the substance of that advice and inviting representations about it, and giving reasons for any departure on my part from the judicial review.

With regard to the discretion to alter tariff, I reiterate that the view which I take (or a Minister acting under my authority takes) at the beginning of a mandatory life sentence, of the period necessary to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence is an initial view of the minimum period necessary to satisfy those requirements. It therefore remains possible for me, or a future Secretary of State, exceptionally to revise that view of the minimum period, either by reducing it, or by increasing it where I, or a successor in my office, conclude that, putting aside questions of risk, the minimum requirements of retribution and deterrence will not have been satisfied at the expiry of the period which had previously been determined. The procedure for considering any increase of a tariff once set will include the opportunity for the prisoner to make representations after being informed that the Secretary of State is minded to increase tariff, and to be given reasons for any subsequent decision to increase it.

So far as the potential for a reduction in tariff is concerned, I shall be open to the possibility that, in exceptional circumstances, including for example, exceptional progress by the prisoner whilst in custody, a review and reduction of the tariff may be appropriate. I shall have this possibility in mind when reviewing at the 25 year point the cases of prisoners given a whole life tariff and in that respect will consider issues beyond the sole criteria of retribution and deterrence described in the answer given on 7 December 1994. Prisoners will continue to be given the opportunity to make representations and to have access to the material before me.

I intend to apply these policies in respect of all tariffs for adult murderers, whether or not they were originally set before 27 July 1993 and whether or not they were originally fixed by me personally, or a Minister acting on my behalf, or by or on behalf of a previous holder of my office. In the Pierson case, where the tariff has now been quashed, I intend to invite representations from the prisoner before re-setting tariff at a level which I consider appropriate.

I take the opportunity to confirm that my approach on the release of adults convicted of murder once tariff has expired will reflect the policy set out in the answer given 27 July 1993. In particular, the release of such a person will continue to depend not only on the expiry of tariff and on my being satisfied that the level of risk of his committing further imprisonable offences presented by his release is acceptably low, but also on the need to maintain public confidence in the system of criminal justice. The position of a prisoner subject to a mandatory life sentence continues to be distinct from that of a prisoner serving a discretionary life sentence, a decision on whose final release is a matter for the Parole Board alone.

Everything in this answer about my practice in relation to mandatory life sentence prisoners applies equally to persons who are, or will be, sentenced, to custody for life under section 8 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982. For present purposes, a life sentence imposed under section 2 of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 is treated as a discretionary life sentence.

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to implement the House of Lords judgment in Regina V Secretary of State for the Home Department ex parte V and T given on 12 June. [15641]

Mr. Straw: This judgment was concerned with the periods of imprisonment, known as the tariff, set by my predecessor, the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) as being necessary to reflect the requirements of retribution and deterrence in the cases of the two boys convicted of the murder of James Bulger. The House of Lords concluded that the current arrangements for reviewing tariff in the cases of offenders under the age of eighteen, convicted of murder and sentenced to detention at Her Majesty's pleasure under section 53(1) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, failed adequately to reflect the distinctive nature of that sentence. In particular, the judgment requires that the initial view of what is necessary by way of retribution and deterrence should be capable of reduction in the light of the offender's personal development while in custody, and that the offender's personal development should therefore be considered alongside the public interest in retribution and deterrence in keeping the tariff period under review.

The House of Lords did not conclude, however, that the sentence of detention at Her Majesty's pleasure was purely reformative in character, nor that the Secretary of State's declaration of an initial view of what was necessary by way of retribution and deterrence was unlawful. The public properly expects the unique crime of murder to attract an appropriate punishment, regardless of the age or circumstances of the offender. It is in the interests of victims' families, public confidence, and of the individual offender that a clear indication should be given, relatively quickly following conviction, of the Secretary of State's initial view of the minimum period of imprisonment necessary to reflect the seriousness of the particular offence. I intend to continue to provide that initial view as at present, taking into account the advice of the trial judge and the Lord Chief Justice, any representations made on the offender's behalf and the overarching requirements of public confidence in the sentence of detention at Her Majesty's pleasure. That initial view will continue also to reflect an awareness of the offender's age and personal circumstances at the time of conviction.

Public confidence in the sentence will not be maintained if that initial tariff is curtailed lightly or as a matter of course. Rather, it should be reduced only where the balance between the public interest in punishment on the one hand, and the public interest in the offender's welfare on the other, has clearly shifted so as to justify such a reduction. Moreover, the more serious the circumstances of the offence, as reflected in the length of the initial tariff, the higher will be the threshold at which the public interest in the offender's welfare may outweigh the public interest in the offender's punishment.

However, I have also to act on the House of Lords' conclusion that the law requires the sentence's effect upon the offender to be kept under review and that there may be circumstances in which the desirability of promoting the child's eventual re-integration into society may justify a revision of the initial view on tariff.

Taking these considerations into account, this is the new procedure which I shall adopt. I shall continue to seek the advice of the trial judge and of the Lord Chief Justice in deciding what punishment is required in any individual case of a person convicted under section 53(1) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933. I shall then set an initial tariff with that advice, and the offender's personal circumstances, in mind. I shall continue to invite representations on the prisoner's behalf and give reasons for decisions.

Officials in my Department will receive annual reports on the progress and development of young people sentenced under section 53(1) whose initial tariff has yet to expire. Where there appears to be a case for considering a reduction in tariff, that will be brought to the attention of Ministers.

When half of the initial tariff period has expired, I, or a Minister acting on my behalf, will consider a report on the prisoner's progress and development, and invite representations on the question of tariff, with a view to determining whether the tariff period originally set is still appropriate. In complex and difficult cases, I shall seek the assistance of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health in securing independent professional advice (that is to say, independent of those already charged with the care of the offender) on the young offender's condition and development.

Any request for a review of tariff before it expires will be considered on its merits, whether that request is made by or on behalf of the offender or by one of the agencies or individuals responsible for his or her care.

In considering requests, inviting representations, and in conducting reviews, I will look for evidence of:

- significant alteration in the offender's maturity and outlook since the commission of the offence;
- risks to the offender's continued development that cannot be sufficiently mitigated or removed in the custodial environment;
- any matter that calls into question the basis of the original decision to set tariff at a particular level (for example, about the circumstances of the offence itself or the offender's state of mind at the time); together with any other matter which appears relevant.

So far as the offender's age is concerned. I shall take into account the Government's international and domestic obligations to children under the age of 18 in deciding where the balance between the public interest in punishment and the public interest in the offender's welfare lies. That balance will also have been at the heart of the decision on the proper length of the initial tariff.

Where I consider that the offender's welfare may be seriously prejudiced by his or her continued imprisonment, and that the public interest in the offender's welfare outweighs the public interest in a further period of imprisonment lasting at least until the expiry of the provisionally set tariff, I will decide to reduce the tariff. In these circumstances, release on or after tariff expiry will be dependent on the question of risk, decided in the same way as at present.

There are currently 106 such offenders whose tariffs have been set but have not yet expired. My officials will write to each of them with the text of this statement asking if they wish to have their tariff reviewed in the way I have described, and, if so, on what grounds. I will, in any event, undertake reviews in each of the 74 cases where the halfway point of the tariff has been passed but where there are still two years or more to serve before tariff expires. The cases of those closest to tariff expiry will be considered first.

I believe the procedure I have described fully meets the requirement to keep the imprisonment of offenders sentenced to detention at Her Majesty's pleasure under review, and to treat such cases in a distinct way, having regard to the public interest in the welfare of children alongside the public interest in the proper and proportionate punishment of offenders. No one who has committed murder and is sentenced to detention at Her Majesty's pleasure will be released unless two conditions are satisfied: first, the tariff period necessary for punishment must have been served; and, secondly, the Parole Board must be satisfied that the risk posed to the public by the offender's release would be acceptably low.

The tariffs set by my predecessor in the two particular cases considered by the House of Lords have been quashed. I intend to consider reports, invite representations on behalf of those offenders, and seek independent professional advice, before resetting an initial tariff within the terms of this statement, taking into account also the criticism contained in the judgement of the reasons given by my predecessor.

Prison Service Management and Organisation

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Director General's review of management and organisation of the Prison Service. [15642]

Mr. Straw: The Director General has now completed an internal review of the management and organisation of the Prison Service.

The review has recommended, and I have endorsed, a programme of action with the following key elements:

(i) measures to assert and reinforce Ministerial responsibility for the Prison Service. The Government have already made clear their commitment to taking proper Ministerial responsibility for the Prison Service. Parliamentary Questions are now answered by Ministers and not by the Director General. Further measures to be taken in the light of this review are as follows:

- from 1 January Ministers will chair quarterly meetings to review formally the performance and plans of the Prison Service. The report concludes, and I agree, that in the circumstances of the Prison Service such an arrangement better supports the Government's approach to Ministerial oversight than any form of separate Advisory Board;
- the Agency Framework Document will be updated and reissued with a new Ministerial preface when the Comprehensive Spending Review is further advanced;
- the Prison Service will take action to develop a greater sensitivity to the nature and demands of Ministerial responsibility for the Service at all levels in the Agency. This will be reflected in specific training programmes and in key documentation.

(ii) a new focus on the delivery of effective prison regimes and preparation for the release of prisoners. The Government are committed to the development of constructive prison regimes which address offending behaviour. Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons has drawn attention to, and been critical of, the wide variation in standard levels of performance between prisons of the same type. The review concludes that an improvement in performance in this area is required; and that the top management of the Prison Service is not, at present, organised in such a way as to deliver the necessary leadership and direction required to secure an improvement. The Prison Service will, therefore:

- plan for and seek substantial improvements in the effectiveness of regimes and the preparation of prisoners for release, while continuing to maintain its performance in relation to security and control; and
- create a stronger capacity within Headquarters to develop regime standards and polices for all prisoner groups and to support the operational line in monitoring performance and spreading best practice. This will be provided by a Director of Regimes at Prisons Board level, supported by Assistant Directors with separate, specific responsibility for: young offenders; women; adult males, lifers and parole; and prisoner administration.

(iii) a major programme of change to improve the managerial effectiveness of the organisation. This reflects the need for:

- the Prisons Board itself to operate more strategically and effectively. Responsibilities will be clarified at Board level, with separate policy Directors of Regimes, Security and Healthcare. One policy Director will be designated as Deputy Director General and will deputise for the Director General in his absence and ensure effective co-ordination of the day day to work of the Service;
- more effective standard-setting and performance management systems. A clear set of core standards will be formulated, supported by a set of functional standards for different types of prisoner and prison. The contact between the Governor and the Area Manager will be used as the key business management tool of the Prison Service; and in the longer term the Service will move towards the replacement of contracts with more formal service level agreements, providing a form of internal purchaser/provider arrangement;
- a major investment in management development and training will be taken forward when the Prison Service can identify efficiency savings. The net for recruiting managers to all levels in the Prison Service will also be widened.

I welcome the outcome of this review—not least because it is the product of an internal, rather than externally imposed, analysis. None of the proposals to be implemented is intended to pre-empt the outcome of the wider review of the Prison and Probation Services which I announced in reply to a Question from the hon. Member for Bristol, North-West (Dr. Naysmith). Official Report, column 172, or the Comprehensive Spending Review, which are proceeding in parallel. The action proposed will, however, help to position the Prison Service for whatever changes may emerge from these reviews and make improvements which are needed in their own right. The Review will be taken forward within existing Prison Services resources.

I am placing copies of the Review in the Library.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration Appeals

37. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to clear the backlog of cases in the Immigration Tribunal. [13464]

Mr. Hoon: The backlog of outstanding adjudicator appeals is starting to come down. It has fallen by 1,721 appeals since the end of July. We are appointing more adjudicators and giving them the help they need to deal with more cases.

Secret Societies

39. Mr. Mullin: to ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for requiring members of the judiciary to disclose membership of secret societies; and if he will make a statement. [13467]

Mr. Hoon: The Home Affairs Committee, of which my hon. Friend is now the Chairman, recommended shortly before the election that police officers, magistrates, judges and crown prosecutors should be required to register membership of any secret society. The Government are considering the recommendations contained in that report and will respond to the Committee in due course.

Legal Aid

38. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what primary legislation his Department intends to introduce in relation to legal aid. [13465]

Mr. Hoon: Extending conditional fees to all civil, but not family, cases, and withdrawing legal aid from most civil claims for money or damages, can be done under existing legislation. Subject to consultation, we expect to bring in the necessary regulations soon. Making contracting the only way to provide legal aid services, and changing the merits test to reflect the availability of resources, will need primary legislation. I hope to be able to bring forward a new Legal Aid Bill in due course.

41. Mr. Steen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his policy toward controlling the legal aid budget. [13469]

Mr. Hoon: I propose to control the legal aid budget by ensuring that legal aid is targeted to where it can do most good and is used only where no appropriate alternative method of funding is available. For the longer term I wish to see legal aid being delivered under contracts that will define the price quality and quantity of service to be provided tailored to the local needs of the community.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures his Department is taking to ensure consistency in decisions relating to the granting of legal aid. [14930]

Mr. Hoon: Civil legal aid is granted by the Legal Aid Board in accordance with the statutory merits test. The Board use a number of procedures to ensure the test is applied consistently. There is a programme of work to improve the decision making process in the Legal Aid Board Area Offices, through the revision of existing guidance and the production of new guidance. My officials are also reviewing the operation of the merits test with the Legal Aid Board.

In addition the Lord Chancellor recently announced plans to tighten the merits test so that a case would generally need a 75 per cent. chance of success in order to receive legal aid unless there were other compelling reasons for granting it. It is also proposed that the decision to grant should also take account of the available resources. However it would require primary legislation to give effect to these proposals.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of legal aid in each of the last three years (a) exclusive and (b) inclusive of VAT. [15069]

Mr. Hoon: Net expenditure on legal aid for the last three years is as follows:

1994–95: £1,298.7 million

1995–96: £1,390.5 million

1996–97: £1,475.7 million

Information on VAT is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Since not all disbursements attract VAT, and not all solicitors and counsel have always been registered for VAT, it is not possible to calculate the total VAT that is paid out of the Legal Aid Fund.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list (a) the amount of expenditure on the Green Form scheme for 1996-97 and (b) the percentage of that expenditure which relates to (i) immigration, (ii) welfare benefits, (iii) debt, (iv) consumer and (v) other. [14931]

Mr. Hoon: Net expenditure on the Green Form scheme, in 1996–97, was £151 million. Expenditure, as a percentage and by category of advice given, was as follows:

Immigration and Nationality[1] 17 per cent.

Welfare Benefits 9 per cent.

Debt 4 per cent.

Consumer 2 per cent.

Other 68 per cent.

[1] It is not possible to identify separately the cost of advice given in respect of immigration matters.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what percentage of the statutory charge was recovered by the Legal Aid Board in each of the last three years; [15070]

(2) what is the total value of the statutory charge currently owed to the Legal Aid Board. [15068]

Mr. Hoon: Moneys recovered by way of the statutory charge relate to cases where charges have been outstanding over a number of years, and therefore there is no annual total statutory charge against which the moneys recovered in the same year could be measured as a percentage.

The total value of quantified statutory charges outstanding at the end of the 1996–97 financial year was £185.9 million.

40. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on his plans to reform legal aid. [13468]

43. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about his future plans for legal aid. [13471]

44. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the proposed reforms of the legal aid system. [13472]

Mr. Hoon: Our plans for legal aid reform were announced by my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor in his recent speech to the Law Society Annual Conference. Subject to consultation, we intend to make conditional fees available for all civil non-family cases; to withdraw legal aid from most claims for money or damages; and to make contracting the universal way of procuring legal aid services. These changes will allow us to target scarce resources on the people who need them most, and will bring the cost of legal aid under better control and improve quality and value for money.

Civil Cases (Conditional Fees)

42. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact on poor litigants of a system of conditional fees in respect of civil cases. [13470]

Mr. Hoon: My officials are currently talking to interested parties to ensure that all can benefit from the extension of conditional fees that I propose.

Statute of Limitations

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the review of the Statute of Limitations will be published. [13466]

Mr. Hoon: The Law Commission is in the process of carrying out a review of the complex law of limitation periods and expects to publish a consultation paper by the end of this year or very early in 1998. Following the consultation period, which is likely to end in April 1998, responses will be analysed and final recommendations will be drawn up for publication in a Law Commission Report. It is too early yet to say when that report will be ready for publication.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures he is taking to ensure that those claiming compensation for injuries incurred at work are not obliged to prove that their injury was caused by another. [14569]

Mr. Hoon: The arguments on whether or not the burden of proof should be reversed in respect of accidents occurring in the workplace are finely balanced and the Government have no plans to disturb the existing arrangements. In a report recently presented to the Lord Chancellor by Sir Peter Middleton, a recommendation was made that the possible advantages of no-fault compensation schemes be examined. The Government are considering this together with Sir Peter's other recommendations.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14385]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 5 November, Official Report, column 216.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received in respect of proposals to close the magistrates court in Tavistock; and if he will make a statement. [14041]

Mr. Hoon: I have received one representation in respect of Devon Magistrates' Courts Committee's proposals to close the Tavistock Magistrates' Court.

Magistrates' courts are provided by the local paying authority for the use of magistrates' court committees (MCC). Decisions concerning the future of any magistrates' court are for the relevant MCC to determine, in consultation with the local paying authority.

Under section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997, the Lord Chancellor's responsibility in relation to magistrates' courts is limited to that of an appellate court in a dispute between the MCC and its paying authority over a proposed court closure.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he will consult on the future of magistrates courts. [14033]

Mr. Hoon: Magistrates' courts are provided by the local paying authority for the use of the magistrates' courts committee (MCC). Decisions concerning the future of individual magistrates' courts are for the relevant magistrates' courts committee to determine, in consultation with the local paying authority. The paying authority may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure. That is the only time my Department becomes involved. I have, therefore no plans to consult on the future of magistrates' courts.

More generally, I refer the hon. Member for Tiverton and Honiton to the statement that I made in the House on 29 October, Official Report, columns 901–14, a copy of which is in the library.

Conditional Fees

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations he has received in support of the proposals set out in the recent statement about the extension of conditional fees; and if he will make a statement. [14085]

Mr. Hoon: My Department has had in the region of thirty inquiries from individual members of the public. The overwhelming message is that the proposed extension of conditional fees will be a real answer to the real problem they face of being denied access to justice through unaffordable lawyers' fees.

HEALTH

Winter Mortality Rates

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list winter death rates (a) for the whole population, (b) for those over pensionable age, (c) for those aged over 65 years and (d) per 1,000 population for those EU countries for which statistics are available. [14257]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from John Fox to Mr. Nigel Evans, dated November 1997:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics has been asked to answer your recent question on excess winter deaths. In his absence, I am replying as the Director of the Census, Population and Health Group.

Based on the latest available data, the estimated numbers of excess deaths in England and Wales during the 1996–97 winter, are given in the table below.

Excess winter deaths are defined as the number of deaths in the four months from December to March less the average of the numbers during the preceding autumn (August to November) and the following summer (April to July).

There were 0.9 excess winter deaths per 1,000 population in 1996/97 in England and Wales. The Office for National Statistics does not compile comparable figures for other EU countries.

	Excess winter deaths
Whole population	48,600
Over pensionable age	45,600
65 years and over	44,800

Mental Health (Extra-contractual Referrals)

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much of the national health service budget was spent in the last financial year in the private sector in order to treat mental health extra-contractual referrals. [13124]

Mr. Boateng: The provisional figure of total expenditure by health authorities, general practitioner fundholders and National Health Service trusts on the purchase of health care from the private sector amounted to £594 million in 1996–97, the latest year available. This cannot be broken down into the type of services purchased from the private sector.

Dental Services

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average list size of dentists with NHS patients in (a) North Staffordshire, (b) West Midlands and (c) nationally; and if he will make a statement. [14254]

Mr. Milburn: At June 1997, the average number of adults and children registered for each General Dental Service dentist was 2,044 in North Staffordshire, 1,913 in West Midlands and 1,622 in England.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on standards of dental health in (a) North Staffordshire, (b) West Midlands and (c) nationally. [14255]

Mr. Milburn: One clear measure of the standards of oral health is the incidence of dental caries. The British Association for the Study of Community Dentistry co-ordinates annual surveys of dental caries prevalence in different aged children. The attached tables show the most recent data for the mean number of decayed, missing and filled in deciduous teeth only of five-year-old children, and in the permanent teeth only of twelve and fourteen-year-old children in North Staffordshire, West Midlands and England. Similar data for adults are published every ten years. However, since the most recent data are based on a survey in 1988 and are therefore not particularly up-to-date, they are not presented here.

By tradition the acronym for decayed, missing and filled teeth is shown in upper case for permanent teeth—DMFT—and in lower case for deciduous teeth—dmft.

Mean number of dmft of five-year-olds[1] in 1995–96

	Number
North Staffordshire	1.81
West Midlands	1.08
England	1.63

[1] Deciduous teeth only.

Mean number of DMFT of twelve-year-olds[1] in 1992–93

	Number
North Staffordshire	1.17
West Midlands	0.85
England	1.15

[1] Permanent teeth only.

Mean number of DMFT of fourteen-year-olds[1] in 1994–95

	Number
North Staffordshire	1.99
West Midlands	1.24
England	1.67

[1] Permanent teeth only.

Private Finance Initiative

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the revenue consequences of capital investments undertaken to date under the private finance initiative, listing all such schemes and the financing costs excluding any ongoing staffing costs; and if he will compare these costs with those pertaining under traditional public borrowing. [14031]

Mr. Milburn: The amount paid to the private sector under Private Finance Initiative contracts will vary depending on the level and quality of service.

The annual unitary payments for the two major acute sector PFI schemes that have reached financial close are expected to be:

Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust: £18.6 million

Carlisle NHS Trust: £10.9 million

The unitary payment is the cost of providing a fully serviced hospital facility. It includes elements of cost for the provision and maintenance of assets, the management of facilities, and financing. To be approved a PFI contract must offer better, or comparable, value for money to the publicly funded alternative.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the capital investment by the NHS in health care projects (a) in total and (b) within the Birmingham local authority area in each of the last five years up to and including 1996–97, and in each five year period since 1972–73 at actual and constant 1996–97 prices, separately identifying expenditure under the private finance initiative. [14030]

Mr. Milburn: The table shows the total amount of publicly financed capital expenditure within the Hospital and Community Health Services in England and within NHS trusts and hospitals in the Birmingham area.

£ million

Year	Gross HCHS capital expenditure (cash)	Gross HCHS capital expenditure (real terms[1])	Capital expenditure within the Birmingham area (cash)	Capital expenditure within the Birmingham area (real terms)
1973–74	265	1,754	n/a	n/a
1977–78	353	1,207	n/a	n/a
1982–83	778	1,475	n/a	m/a
1987–88	1,112	1,676	n/a	n/a
1992–93	1,815	2,002	n/a	n/a
1993–94	1,783	1,911	93	100
1994–95	2,049	2,163	58	61
1995–96	1,996	2,052	76	78
1996–97	1,683	1,683	65	65

[1] A consistent run of figures for HCHS Capital Expenditure for the period 1972–73 to 1977–78 is not available.
1. Figures for capital expenditure within the Birmingham area are taken from NHS Executive Regional Office records and are not directly comparable with the England figures. Figures prior to 1993–94 are not readily available.
2. Real terms figures have been calculated using the GDP deflator of 2 July 1997.

In addition the Private Finance Initiative has contributed an estimated further £55 million in each of the years 1995–96 and 1996–97. There are no completed PFI deals in the Birmingham local authority area.

National Blood Service

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the redundancy and pensions costs of personnel taking redundancy or early retirement from the National Blood Service have been since 1 April 1995, (a) nationally and (b) in each zone. [14457]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is given in the table.

London and South East zone	1,372
Midlands and South West zone	987
Northern zone	1,067
Total	3,426

The total costs, including the full lifetime costs of early retirement according to National Health Service Accounting Treatment, will be £5.694 million.

Social Services (Winter Funding)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list for each Social Services Department his estimate of the additional funding which will be made available this winter; [14592]

(2) if he will list by health authority the dates at which the social services departments within each authority were invited to make applications for additional funding to assist with managing pressures over this winter, indicating the deadlines they were given for completing their funding applications. [14597]

Mr. Boateng: An additional £300 million has been made available for the health service in the United Kingdom this winter. Details of the allocations process in England were set out in Executive Letter EL(97)64, copies of which have been placed in the Library. This letter asked health authorities to draw up plans for using the additional resources to improve services, in consultation with trusts, general practitioners and social services departments, by 31 October. These plans were to be agreed by the regional offices of the National Health Service Executive by 7 November. Details of the allocations to health authorities will be made public once they are available.

National Care Council

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the Rowntree Commission's proposals for a National Care Council. [14589]

Mr. Boateng: The Rowntree report is a significant and thoughtful contribution to the debate about long-term care arrangements, and its proposals will no doubt be looked at carefully in the context of the Government's intention to take forward their programme of work in this area.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each health authority (a) the integrated allocation for hospital and community health services and (b) the funding per capita for (i) 1996–97 and (ii) 1997–98. [14600]

Mr. Milburn: A table detailing the information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what interim weighting was used for community health services for the 1997–98 integrated allocation for hospital and community health services. [14599]

Mr. Milburn: An interim needs weighting was introduced into the main weighted capitation formula in 1997–98. This formula is used to inform general allocations to health authorities.

The needs weighting took the form of a number of indices which reflect the specific pattern of need for community health services, based on indicators of health and socioeconomic status from the Census and other sources.

Full details are given in the booklet "HCHS Revenue Resource Allocation to Health Authorities: Weighted Capitation Formulas", copies of which are available in the Library.

Adhesive Arachnoiditis

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of state for Health for what reasons the Department of Health was not represented at the conference held in London in 1995 by Dr. Burton on the subject of adhesive arachnoiditis. [14602]

Ms Jowell: The Chief Medical Officer was unable to attend this conference because of previous commitments. His deputy was unable to attend the conference at short notice.

NHS Pay Awards

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) NHS trusts in the Northern and Yorkshire region, (b) community trusts nationally and (c) trusts nationally have reached agreement with their staff over the local element of the national NHS pay awards for 1996–97; and what percentage of (i) trusts and (ii) NHS staff are covered by these agreements in each case. [14236]

Mr. Milburn: We are not aware of any ongoing negotiations on the local element of the National Health Service Pay award for 1996–97.

Nottingham Health Authority

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage level of capitation funding the Nottingham health authority has received for each of the last five years; and what is the planned figure for 1997–98. [14419]

Mr. Milburn: The general allocations for Nottingham Health Authority for 1993–94 to 1998–99 and the percentage of the health authority's weighted capitation target they represent are shown in the attached table.

In 1998–99 formula changes have increased Nottingham Health Authority's weighted capitation target. As a result they have received 2.39 per cent. real terms growth. This is the eleventh highest real terms growth in percentage terms of all health authorities in England.

Nottingham Health Authority

Year	General allocation (£ million)	Weighted capitation target (per cent.)
1998–99	286.6	96.5
1997–98	272.2	97.6
1996–97	262.2	97.4
1995–96	253.4	96.7
1994–95	232.2	99.9
1993–94	224.6	101.4

The figures are not directly comparable year-on-year because of the following changes to the way allocations have been made:

1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96—these figures were collected centrally and adjusted to allow for the different ways in which the regional health authorities made allocations to district health authorities.

Since 1996–97 General Allocations have been made direct to health authorities.

Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to protect mentally ill patients from harassment and intimidation in their communities. [14563]

Mr. Boateng: The appropriate statutory authorities have a responsibility to ensure that mentally ill patients are cared for in the community in a safe and therapeutic environment. Clearly, mental health services need to proceed with sensitivity and adopt an informative, open approach in handling their [illegible]s for community developments. However, we recognise that the stigmatisation of mental illness is a serious problem. We therefore attach great importance to the need to increase knowledge and understanding about mental health among the general public, thereby promoting a positive image of mental health and combatting stigma. Through our Impact Mental Illness Public Information Strategy, we are working closely with the voluntary sector, the media and other groups to take forward such work.

Refugees and Asylum Seekers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons refugees and asylum seekers are not included in the formula for allocating funding to individual health authorities, with specific reference to health authorities in London; and if he will amend the funding formula to take account of the health needs of refugees and asylum seekers. [14622]

Mr. Milburn: Refugees and asylum seekers are already included in the population data which are used in the weighted capitation formula to allocate funds to health authorities.

We are however asking the Advisory Committee on Resource Allocation (ACRA) to look at all aspects of population statistics used for resource allocation. ACRA will also consider whether there are any extra unavoidable costs associated with ethnicity.

Basildon and Thurrock General Hospitals NHS Trust

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 76-77 (1) if one of the two vacant posts of non-executive director only required specific skills; and if he will make a statement; [15003]

(2) how many of the shortlisted applicants for the post of non-executive director of the Basildon and Thurrock General Hospitals NHS Trust had audit skills; [15004]

(3) how many candidates shortlisted for interviews for the post of non-executive director at the Basildon and Thurrock General Hospitals NHS Trust had theappropriate skills and capacity to chair the Trust's Audit Committee and met the requirements of the job description; [15007]

(4) for what reasons candidates for interview were not advised of detailed job descriptions relating to the need to have appropriate skills and to be able to chair the Trust's Audit Committee. [15005]

Mr. Milburn: The interview panel were looking for one candidate capable of chairing the trust's audit committee, and another to have responsibility for patient relations and act as a complaints convenor. Four of the eleven shortlisted applicants, ten of whom were subsequently interviewed by the panel, were judged to have the appropriate skills to chair the audit committee. All applicants received the standard job description for non-executive directors which states that non-executives may be asked to sit on the audit committee or oversee the trust's response to complaints from the public. The local advertisement for the vacancies also made it clear that one of those appointed would be expected to chair the audit committee.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 76–77, by whom and on what basis were (a) Mr. Ian MacDonald, (b) Mr. Ian Robertson and (c) Mr. Geoff Jennings selected to serve on the selection/interviewing panel for the vacant non-executive director's post at the Basildon and Thurrock General Hospitals NHS Trust. [15006]

Mr. Milburn: The interview panel was recommended by the current chairman of the Basildon and Thurrock General Hospitals National Health Service Trust and approved by the National Health Service Executive Regional Office.

NHS Funding

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the annual change in funding for the national health service for each year from 1979–80 to 1998–99 in (a) cash terms, (b) 1996–97 prices and (c) percentage real terms; and if he will make a statement. [14751]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is set out in the attached table.

Suicides

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary for Health what action he is taking to reduce the incidence of suicide. [14564]

Mr. Boateng: Latest figures show an encouraging downward trend in the overall suicide rate—9.8 per cent. since 1990 (based on a three-year average) but there is no room for complacency. As there is no single reason why people take their own lives, action needs to be taken on a number of fronts. Measures include: reducing access to means, for example, we recently announced restrictions on paracetamol and aspirin pack sizes and improvements in warnings about the effect of overdose; increasing public awareness and understanding about mental illness; focusing on high risk groups, for example, the development of a telephone helpline for young men; educating health and social care professionals about depression; audit of serious incidents and the dissemination of findings; and improving primary and secondary mental health services.

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the nature and value of contracts his Department has entered into and (b) discussions ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14951]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 7 November 1997]: The Department has no record of placing any contracts with Monitor Consultancy in the period 1 April 1992 to the present time. Information about the period 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1992 is not readily available and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Train Passengers

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, if he will list the percentage of passengers in excess of capacity carried by each train operating company during (a) the morning peak hours and (b) the evening peak hours and the number of standing passengers that this represents in each case; and if he will make a statement. [13051]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Figures for 1995 and 1996 are in the table. The trend shows that the number of peak passengers into and out of London has increased but the levels of crowding have reduced. Certain ScotRail services are also subject to Passengers in Excess of Capacity (PIXC) monitoring, but figures are not yet available.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Pollution (South-East Asia)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department has taken in respect of the recent pollution incident in the Malaysian Peninsula, Borneo and Sumatra. [15047]

Mr. Foulkes: We reacted swiftly to the environmental emergency in South East Asia with a grant of £62,066 to the United Nations Department of Humanitarian Affairs to provide relief goods to those affected. We offered to send aircraft with infra-red reconnaissance capability to pin-point the location of fires but these were no longer required. We have also provided two experts to support the United Nations' disaster assessment and co-ordination role and a fire-fighting and logistics expert to lead the Technical Co-ordination Group established to co-ordinate international assistance for the provision of ground fire-fighting equipment and training.

UNESCO

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development from where savings have been found in her Department's budget to fund membership of UNESCO. [14824]

Mr. Foulkes: Our contribution of £5 million for the period 1 July to 31 December 1997 has been met from DFID's in-year contingency reserve. Future annual contributions are being considered in the current resources round.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders her Department made during the summer adjournment. [14383]

Mr. Foulkes: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 5 November, Official Report, column 216.

Windward Islands

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what technical assistance has been provided to St. Lucia, Dominica and Grenada to help diversify their economies; and if he will make a statement. [14995]

Mr. Foulkes: Current UK Technical Assistance aims to strengthen exportable food crop research, macro economic policy and public sector development. This complements substantial EC resources, to which Britain contributes, to promote agricultural and broader economic diversification initiatives in these islands.

Montserrat

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the UK's aid to Montserrat. [14989]

Mr. Foulkes: Since the start of the volcanic crisis some £45.8 million of emergency aid, development assistance and budgetary aid has been committed by Her Majesty's Government to the needs of Montserrat. We are currently working with the Government of Montserrat to develop a sustainable development plan for the north of the island and doing all we can to improve the services provided by Government of Montserrat for the people and the Island. We are also providing assistance to those who wish to leave Montserrat.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

E-Mail

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library a list of the e-mail addresses of all Ministers; and if he will make a statement on whether Ministers are accessible by e-mail. [13767]

Dr. David Clark: A list of Ministers' e-mail addresses is not held centrally. However, if Ministers would like a central list set up then I would be happy to take this forward. Individual departments are responsible for providing their Ministers with e-mail addresses.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Employment

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for maximising (a) employment levels and (b) employability across the European Union. [14421]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Unemployment is Europe's most acute problem. A special European Council (the "Jobs Summit") is to take place in Luxembourg on 20/21 of this month, and my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary will attend for the UK. The main challenge for the Jobs Summit is to produce agreement on the areas where Member States should be taking measures to tackle unemployment and to promote a high and sustainable level of employment. The Summit will discuss draft Employment Guidelines, which are required under the provisions of the Amsterdam Treaty. The Guidelines are central to the efforts of Member States and the EU in the field of employment. We shall want the agreed Guidelines to reflect the paramount importance of employability and job creation. The Commission's draft, published on 1 October, provides a good basis for discussion in it's key themes of adaptability, employability, entrepreneurship, and equal opportunities. We shall want the Summit to commit Member States to take positive action which can be realised during our Presidency and carried forward in the Presidencies that follow.

The UK Presidency of the Council in the first half of next year gives us a real opportunity to shift the European agenda in a new direction. Our intention is for the Presidency in the Social Affairs and Education fields to have employability as a key, shared theme. There will be a joint informal Council meeting in London next March of next year, formal Councils later in the Presidency and a range of key conferences. Education and Social Affairs Ministers across Europe will be working together and we will be looking to engage many people in our discussions and in taking work forward.

The Presidency will encompass work on lifelong learning and on innovative ways of tackling unemployment and combating social exclusion. Following the Jobs Summit we intend to set the framework for the Community's new education and training programmes and to focus on the role of the member states and the Community in improving skill levels. During our Presidency we intend to shift the European agenda decisively and to make a concrete start in giving people the skills and adaptability needed for successful careers in the flexible labour markets which are a key part of ensuring the competitiveness of Europe.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he will take to ensure that black and Asian young people benefit from the Government's welfare to work proposals. [14402]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government are committed to ensuring that the New Deal will actively promote equality of opportunity for young people of all ethnic and racial groups. Delivery arrangements for each element of the programme—the Gateway, the four options and follow-through support—will promote racial equality and are based on detailed consideration of how best to deliver provision for young people from ethnic minorities, including consultation with the Commission for Racial Equality and encouragement to Race Equality Councils to be involved in local arrangements. Further details of the arrangements particularly relating to ethnic minority participants are set out in the New Deal Design document which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what sanctions he proposes to impose on those aged under 25 years who are unemployed who refuse to take up any of the options offered to them under the Welfare to Work scheme. [14683]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 7 November 1997]: We intend that young people who are judged by an Adjudication Officer to have refused a New Deal place without good cause will lose their Jobseeker's Allowance for two weeks. If they refuse a further offer at any time in the following twelve months they will lose JSA for four weeks.

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14380]

Dr. Howells: The following items of secondary legislation were made during the period in question:

The Education (School Leaving Date) Order 1997;

No other delegated legislation or deregulation orders were made.

Discretionary Grants

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his Department's estimate of the number of applicants for discretionary grants who have been refused by their local education authority in each of the last five years. [14561]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The information requested is not available centrally.

Student Loans

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what is his Department's estimate of the number of graduates who (a) earn too little to repay loans and (b) have defaulted on repayment; and if he will make a statement. [14560]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 6 November 1997]: At 31 March 1997, (a) 314,378 (49 per cent.) borrowers due to repay were deferring repayment because their income was below 85 per cent. of national average earnings and (b) 34,109 (9.3 per cent.) borrowers due to repay but not in deferment were in default.

Home Education

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children are currently being educated at home. [14921]

Ms Estelle Morris: In January 1997 local education authorities in England were providing home tuition to 10,800 children under their duty to arrange suitable education for pupils who cannot attend school. It has been estimated that a further 10,000 children are educated outside the school system, under arrangements made by their parents.

School Places

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the allocation of school places which prevents a local education authority giving children from its own area priority in admissions to its own schools, when pupils from other authorities live closer to the school. [14758]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have no plans to reverse the "Greenwich judgment", under which LEAs may not give preference to children living in their administrative area over children living elsewhere. We do, however, believe that there should be greater co-operation and co-ordination between neighbouring authorities, and we shall encourage this in our proposed new Code of Practice on admissions.

University Applications

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what assessment he has made of university applications for 1997–98 and the levels of parental income of applicants compared with previous years; and if he will make a statement. [14559]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The latest information from the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service indicates that, allowing for the extra Art and Design Admissions Registry applicants new to the UCAS scheme for 1997–98, the number of home and overseas accepted applicants is some 7 to 8 per cent. higher in 1997–98, than in the previous years. Information on the levels of parental income of applicants is not centrally available; nor have we yet received local authorities' annual returns showing the numbers of award-holding students for 1997–98 and the levels of assessed parental contributions, which reflect their income.

Overseas Students

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary for Education and Employment, how many students who did not hold a British passport enrolled at United Kingdom universities from (a) other EU countries and (b) South East Asia for each of the last five years; and what are the projected enrolment figures for (i) the current academic year and (ii) the next two academic years. [14695]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The available data based on domicile rather than passport nationality are given in the table.

Figures for 1997–98 are not yet available.

Higher education full-time and part-time student enrolments in Great Britain

Academic year	EU domicile	South East Asia domicile
1992–93	36,128	29,110
1993–94	43,850	35,210
1994–95	61,090	42,487
1995–96	76,794	49,384
1996–97	79,904	46,475

The Department's forecasts for EU students are confined to those students who receive mandatory awards to cover the cost of their tuition fees. The Department's spending plans allow for a 1 per cent. per annum increase in these numbers. The Department does not make forecasts of the numbers of students from South East Asia who choose to study HE in the UK.

Higher Education Grants

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what is his estimate of the annual cost of returning to the full grant system for higher education. [14562]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The cost of returning to a full grant system would be about £29 million in academic year 1998–99 and £180 million in 1999–2000, at 1997–98 prices. This assumes that both student numbers and the levels of parental contribution remain unchanged; that the new arrangements would be introduced for all students; and that the existing loan entitlement would be replaced by a means-tested grant. The savings generated by the new higher education funding arrangements we have announced would also be foregone.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how the ballots of parents on the future of grammar schools will be triggered; [14938]

(2) if a minimum turnout threshold will be set for ballots on the future of grammar schools; [14966]

(3) how eligible parents will be defined in respect of ballots on the future of grammar schools. [14968]

Mr. Byers: The Department issued on 1 August a consultation letter setting out the principles of the government's approach in relation to ballots of parents on future admission arrangements for grammar schools, and inviting views on the issues arising and the procedures which might be adopted. The letter made clear that parental ballots will be triggered only where a petition seeking a ballot has been put forward by local parents. It sought views on which parents should be eligible to vote in ballots, and on the mechanism for conducting ballots. We have received some 1,100 responses to the consultation letter. These are currently being analysed. We shall announce as soon as possible our conclusions on the best way of carrying our proposals forward.

Teachers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, how many teachers other than those in further or higher education or independent schools (a) were made redundant and (b) did not have their contracts renewed for each month from September 1996 to September 1997. [14694]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his Answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 819, what proportion of teachers, other than those in further and higher education or independent schools, who retired under the age of 60 years in the period October 1996 to September 1997 retired (a) on the grounds of (i) ill-health, (ii) efficiency or (iii) redundancy and (b) aged (1) under 30, (2) 30 to 34, (3) 35 to 39, (4) 40 to 44, (5) 45 to 49, (6) 50 to 54 and (7) 55 to 59 years. [14702]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 November 1997]: There were 19,310 retirements aged under 60 from the maintained schools sector in England and Wales between October 1996 and September 1997 on the grounds of ill-health, efficiency or redundancy. The number of retirements is provisional. The percentage breakdown by age group and type of retirement is given below.

Percentages

Age at retirement	Ill-health[1]	Premature		Total retirements
		Redundancy	Efficiency
Under 30	—	n/a	n/a	—
30 to 34	—	n/a	n/a	—
35 to 39	1	n/a	n/a	1
40 to 44	2	n/a	n/a	2
45 to 49	6	n/a	n/a	6
50 to 54	9	9	41	59
55 to 59	5	4	23	32
All ages	23	14	63	100

— = less than 0.5 per cent.
n/a = not applicable.
[1] Provisional. Figures are likely to change because of late notifications.

Tennis

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of schools and sixth-form colleges which have staff qualified to provide tuition in tennis. [15146]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not collected by the Department.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of schools and sixth-form colleges which provide tuition in tennis, indicating the number of children receiving such tuition. [15145]

Ms Estelle Morris: None. This information is not collected or held centrally.

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the nature and value of contracts his Department has entered into and (b) discussions ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14945]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 November 1997]: There is no record of the Department having entered into any contract with Monitor Consultancy nor have any discussions been held with such a company.

University Students

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the ratio of undergraduate students to teaching staff at (a) Oxford, (b) Cambridge, (c) Durham and (d) all universities in England and Wales. [14629]

Dr. Howells: The latest available information which relates to 1993–94 and covers all students (undergraduates and postgraduates) in all higher education institutions in England shows a student: staff ratio of 16.5.

Because of changes in data sources in 1994–95 more recent figures have not so far been published. It is intended that the next Departmental Annual Report due to be published in March 1998 will contain more up to date figures.

Student:staff ratios for individual institutions are not compiled by the Department. Figures for former University Funding Council universities were published up to 1993–94, by cost centre, in the University Management Statistics and Performance Indicators in the UK publication.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many mature students are currently studying at (a) Oxford, (b) Cambridge and (c) Durham Universities; if he will express that figure as a percentage of the total undergraduate student body of each university; and what is the average for all British universities. [14627]

Dr. Howells: The information is given in the following table:

Mature[1] home and overseas undergraduates in higher education 1996–97

University	Mature undergraduates (thousands)		Percentage of all undergraduates
	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time
Oxford	2.7	2.7	24	100
Cambridge	3.0	2.0	28	99
Durham	2.0	0.6	26	93
All higher education institutions in the UK[2]	446.3	346.4	45	97

[1] Those aged 21 and over in the current academic year. [2] Including the Open University.

Oxford, Cambridge and Durham Colleges

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the cost to his Department arising from the duplication of administrative functions at the constituent colleges of (a) Oxford, (b) Cambridge and (c) Durham universities. [14628]

Dr. Howells: The organisation of their administrative functions is a matter for the colleges concerned, having regard to the resources available to them. The Department does not have information about the cost of those functions, but has asked the Higher Education Funding Council for England to review college fees. We expect soon to receive the Council's advice on the mechanisms for setting future funding for universities and colleges at Oxford and Cambridge and on any implications for the three independent colleges at Durham, which also receive funding through reimbursement of college fees.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will establish the total assets of each constituent college of (a) Oxford, (b) Cambridge and (c) Durham universities. [14625]

Dr. Howells: The constituent colleges of Oxford, Cambridge and Durham universities are private sector institutions. The Further and Higher Education Act 1992 specifically debars Government, through the Higher Education Funding Council for England, from having regard to private income in distributing public funds.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of his Department's budget in each of the last five years went towards college fees for undergraduates studying at colleges within (a) Oxford, (b) Cambridge and (c) Durham universities. [14623]

Dr. Howells: In 1997–98 the net cost of college fees (taking account of the amount of grant clawed back in compensation from Oxford and Cambridge universities by the Funding Council) was £19 million for Oxford, £17 million for Cambridge and £0.6 million for Durham, representing just under 1 per cent. of the Department's budget of £4.4 billion for higher education institutions. The proportion was similar in previous years.

Undergraduates (Private School Background)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of the last five years' undergraduate intake at (a) Oxford, (b) Cambridge and (c) Durham universities were from the private school sector. [14624]

Dr. Howells: The information is not available in the form requested. The latest information available shows that 52 per cent. of students accepted for entry to undergraduate courses at Oxford in Autumn 1996 came from private schools as did 48 per cent. of Cambridge's intake. Comparable information is not available for Durham.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the budget for 1997–98 for each grant-maintained school in England and Wales as funded by the Funding Agency for Schools. [14669]

Mr. Byers: The calculation of grants to individual grant-maintained schools in England is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have therefore written to Sir Anthony Tippet, Chairman of the Funding Agency, to ask him to provide the figures requested. Responsibility for education in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

DEFENCE

Racism

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to combat racism in the armed forces. [14699]

Dr. Reid: As my right hon: Friend the Secretary of State and I have made clear on a number of occasions, it is our aim fully to embrace diversity in the Armed Forces and that they should better reflect the society they defend. We are determined both to provide a working environment that is free from any form of racial harassment or discrimination and to encourage more people from the ethnic minorities to join the Armed Forces. It has been made absolutely clear to all personnel, from all three Services, that we will not tolerate racism in the Armed forces and will be unremitting in our efforts to remove any racist attitudes, racially discriminatory practice, behaviour or language.

Changes in attitudes within the Services and perceptions outside will, of course, take time, but we are determined to make real progress in this area. The recent public launch by the Chief of the General Staff of the Army's revised Equal Opportunities Directive gave an unequivocal commitment to upholding the principle of Equality of Opportunity for all Army personnel.

Examples of the initiatives being pursued by the Army include:

- a booklet setting out a revised, and greatly simplified, complaints procedure designed to assist those exposed to harassment/discrimination, which will be issued to every soldier. The Naval Service and RAF plan to have similar booklets.
- a confidential support helpline service, effective from 1 December, which will be outside the chain of command;
- an independent Investigation Team to investigate complaints of harassment/discrimination;
- a new Ethnic Minorities Recruiting Team to help increase proportions of ethnic minorities serving.

The Chiefs of Staff in the Naval Service and the RAF are equally committed to ensuring equality of opportunity in their respective Services, a commitment exemplified by the success of The Royal Navy in being shortlisted by the British Diversity panel in recognition of its efforts to improve equal opportunities.

All three Services have introduced many initiatives to help combat and eliminate all forms of racism in, and to improve ethnic recruiting to the Armed Forces. Each Service has issued Equal Opportunities Directives and leaflets, which are issued to all servicing and new personnel, spelling out clearly what equal opportunities means, harassment and complaints procedures and their rights and responsibilities. These are supported by individual Service Equal Opportunities Action Plans which allow us to monitor our policies and practice to ensure there is no discrimination. They will also ensure that awareness of both ethnic origin and gender issues are considered when forming new policy and initiatives.

Each of the Services provide equal opportunities training for all new entrants, officers and NCOs promotion and management courses, Commanding Officers, recruiters and equal opportunities advisers. We are looking at what more might be done on a tri-Service basis.

The Chief of Defence Staff, and the individual Service Chiefs have accepted the CRE's Leadership Challenge and have given their personal commitment to promote racial equality, together with taking practical steps to promote change within their own Services. In addition, each of the Services is a member of the Race for Opportunity scheme.

UFOs

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's investigations into alleged sightings of unidentified flying objects intruding into British air space. [14907]

Mr. Spellar: My Department examines any reports of "unexplained" aerial sightings that are sent to us solely to establish whether what was seen might have some defence significance, namely, whether there was any evidence that the UK Air Defence Region might have been breached by hostile or unauthorised foreign military activity. Unless there is evidence of a potential military threat, and to date no "unidentified flying object" sighting has revealed such evidence, we do not attempt to identify the precise nature of each reported incident.

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the information collected at RAF Menwith Hill is available to the British Security Services. [14513]

Dr. Reid: I am withholding information on the operations of the intelligence and security agencies under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information on the grounds of national security.

Trident

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons consideration of the Trident system has been excluded from the defence review. [15026]

Mr. George Robertson: The retention of Trident was a specific commitment in the Government's election manifesto. The review is however examining all aspects of our deterrence requirements to ensure they reflect changing strategic circumstances. The Government will also press for multi-lateral negotiations towards mutual, balanced and verifiable reductions in nuclear weapons.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what strategic factors underlay his decisions to spend an extra £100 million on the Trident system. [15002]

Mr. George Robertson: The recent decision on a long standing element of the nearly completed Trident procurement programme is in line with the Government's manifesto commitment to retain Trident to provide a minimum credible nuclear deterrent.

Hunting

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria his Department has set for the registration of packs of fox hounds which hunt on their land; if such packs must also be recognised by the Master of Fox Hounds Association; and if he will make a statement. [14442]

Mr. Spellar: Foxhunting on the Defence Estate is regulated by the licensing of hunts which are officially recognised and accepted by the Committee of the Master of Foxhounds Association. The licence is issued to a hunt representative who must be a member of the Master of Foxhounds Association.

The registration of packs of foxhounds in the foxhound kennel stud book is a matter for the Master of the Hunt.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Dome

28. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what will be the total cost of constructing the millennium dome at Greenwich. [13455]

Mr. Mandelson: The overall cash budget for the Millennium Experience and associated national programme is £758 million. For that the Nation will get: the catalyst for the long-term physical and economic regeneration of a site that has lain derelict for over 20 years; the most famous new building of the year 2000; an Experience that will be the most original and inspiring Millennium event anywhere in the world; and a National Programme of events and activities that will extend right across the country.

29. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what monitoring he has undertaken of employees contracted to work on the dome. [13456]

Mr. Mandelson: It is for the individual contractors to monitor their own employees. NMEC's work contracts meet all relevant legal requirements.

Contracts also reflect best practice in matters such as Considerate Contractor Scheme. All aspects of the contracts are regularly monitored by the company to ensure compliance.

30. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what plans he has to move the millennium dome from Greenwich in 2001. [13457]

Mr. Mandelson: The Government are currently considering a range of possible, self-financing, uses for the Millennium Experience Dome at Greenwich or possibly elsewhere after 2000.

31. Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how long the millennium experience will be maintained at Greenwich. [13458]

Mr. Mandelson: The Experience will, as presently planned, run on the Greenwich site for 367 days from 31 December 1999 to 31 December 2000.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, pursuant to his answer of 28 July, Official Report, column 25, for what reasons he is unable to list the journeys he has undertaken since 2 May at public expense. [14509]

Mr. Mandelson: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave on 28 July, Official Report, column 25.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, pursuant to his answer of 31 July, Official Report, column 426, for what reasons he does not propose to disclose details of conversations, meetings or other engagements undertaken in pursuance of his duties as Minister without Portfolio. [14510]

Mr. Mandelson: Even if it were possible to keep universally detailed records of the kind the hon. Member appears to envisage, the cost of so doing would be quite disproportionate.

Media Reporting

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the occasions since 2 May on which he or persons within his Office have complained to the media about the reporting of the Government's activities. [14516]

Mr. Mandelson: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Surrey Heath (Mr. Hawkins) on 25 June, Official Report, column 524.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Welfare-to-Work Programme

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the £195 million mentioned in her Department's press release of 29 October will be made available exclusively for the needs of disabled people within the welfare-to-work programme. [14680]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 6 November]: The Government strongly believe that, for people of working age, work is the best form of welfare. We are committed to improving opportunities for sick and disabled people to work, up to £195 million has been set aside from the Windfall Tax to fund this important programme.

Many people with disabilities or long-term health problems want to work and the aim of the Welfare to Work programme is to allow them to do so. We wish to develop ways to give each sick and disabled person the advice, help and support they need to achieve their aspirations and to move towards financial independence.

The money set aside from the Windfall Tax will be used to actively explore a range of approaches, covering various illnesses and disabilities, to identify and pursue the best ways to help people with disabilities and long-term health problems move into work or remain in work.

Mr. Steve Reardon

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will publish the level of salary paid to Government information officers on the same grade as Mr. Steve Reardon; and what plans she has for a successor to be paid more; [15060]

(2) for what reasons Mr. Steve Reardon ceased to work as Director of Information at her Department on 16 September; [15061]

(3) if she requested Mr. Steve Reardon to leave his post; and if she will make a statement; [15062]

(4) if she is seeking a replacement to the Director of Information at her Department from outside the Civil Service; and what is the maximum salary that her Department is prepared to pay an individual accepting that post or a post to replace Mr. Reardon; [15063]

(5) if she will list the advertisements and internal memoranda relating to the vacancy to replace Mr. Reardon at her Department; and if she will publish the job description and duties of the post; [15064]

(6) if the position of Director of Information at her Department as it existed up to 16 September has been abolished; and if she will make a statement; [15065]

(7) if the successor to Mr. Steve Reardon at her Department will be of the same grade as Mr. Reardon; [15066]

(8) if she will publish the job description and duties of the Director of Information at her Department prior to 16 September. [15067]

Ms Harman: The former Director of Information at the DSS left his post on 16 September. I did not request him to leave; he stepped aside after agreeing with the Department the need for a different style and approach in his Directorate. An advertisement for a new Director of Information was placed in The Guardian newspaper on 20 October and, shortly afterwards, was circulated to members of the Government Information Service. The job is open to people with the appropriate skills and experience whether or not they are existing civil servants.

The level of responsibility, the pay range and duties of the post are unaltered. It is a Senior Civil Service post and the appropriate remuneration lies in the range £52,020 to £86,700 per annum. The job description is as follows:

> "The Director of Information is Press Secretary to the Secretary of State for Social Security and is responsible for advice to the Department on media handling and presentation across the full range of its responsibilities, including supporting the Secretary of State in her role as Minister for Women.
> The Director is Head of Profession for all Government Information Service staff with the department and provides advice to Agency Chief Executives on issues such as information standards, staff recruitment and propriety. He/she manages a team of around 40 professional and administrative staff and is responsible for expenditure of around £5 million a year.
> The postholder reports to the Head of Policy Group and is directly accountable to the Secretary of State".

The advertisement offers a salary of up to £70,000 per annum depending upon the experience of the successful candidate. The pay of other senior Information Officers is a matter for individual departments but is determined in the same way and by reference to rules laid down for appointments to the Senior Civil Service.

The selection of a new Director of Information will be conducted under the Civil Service Commissioners' rules which ensure fair and open competition. The selection process will be chaired by a Commissioner.

Benefits Fraud Inspectorate

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money the Government are allocating to the Benefits Fraud Inspectorate; and how much money she estimates will be saved through tighter surveillance of benefit fraud. [15179]

Mr. Denham: The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate (BFI) will play a vital role in driving up operational standards to maximise counter-fraud performance and minimise the risk of fraud throughout the Social Security system. This will be achieved by forward looking inspection reports with recommendations on how performance can be improved and by identifying and encouraging good practice.

Under the spending plans of the previous Government, BFI was allocated an annual running costs budget of £2 million for 1997–98. We are now considering whether this is adequate for the BFI to carry out an effective inspection programme for local authorities and DSS Agencies.

It is not possible to quantify precisely the impact of more secure systems and improvements in standards of counter-fraud activity in preventing and detecting fraud. Much will depend on the nature of the problems identified by the BFI inspections. We expect BFI, along with a range of other work, to deliver in due course permanent reductions in the amount lost to benefit fraud, although it may not be possible to isolate completely the effects of each initiative.

Press Conferences

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances Government press conferences are shared with pressure groups. [15173]

Mr. Field: This Department invites Pressure Groups to attend press conferences when it is appropriate.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are her estimates of the yield to the Exchequer from extending (a) employee and (b) employer national insurance contributions to all taxable benefits in kind; and if she will make a statement. [14522]

Mr. Denham: It is estimated that the extension of Class 1A paid by employers to other taxable benefits at the current 10.0 per cent. rate would raise approximately £300 million. Extending Class 1 paid by both employers and employees to taxable benefits in kind, assuming that all contributions are paid at the main 10 per cent. rate, is estimated to result in revenue of around £850 million in secondary contributions and £250 million in primary. However this would have to be offset against the loss of around £550 million Class 1A, giving a net gain of around £550 million.

We have already announced measures to bring non-cash vouchers into liability for National Insurance. We will continue to keep pay practices and the case for extending contributions to other benefits in kind under review.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the effects on employment of a 1 per cent. reduction in the rates of employers' national insurance contributions; and if she will make a statement. [14518]

Mr. Denham: It is not possible to produce an estimate.

The effect of changes on employers' National Insurance contributions cannot be isolated from other factors affecting the level of employment.

Appeals Backlog

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the extent to which the backlog of appeals will be reduced by the provisions of the Social Security Bill. [15172]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Social Security Bill contains measures which will address the backlog of appeals. For example, the powers for the Commissioners to return supported appeals. In addition, tribunals and the Commissioners will not have to revise cases following a decision of the Commissioners and Courts in a lead case as they will be processed by the Agency.

Other measures will reduce the potential for backlogs to occur in the future. For example, the new disputes process will allow errors to be corrected quickly by the Department's Agencies and will reduce the number of cases that go to appeal. New powers to deal with meritless appeals and the more responsive composition of tribunals will speed up the handling of appeals as well.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will take personal responsibility for the administration of the appeals system, set and publish demanding targets to shorten the time it takes for appeals to be heard, and report on the results.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many income support recipients with a mortgage are currently building up arrears because of the use of a standard interest rate; [15171]

(2) what estimate she has made of the total mortgage arrears run up to date by income support recipients with mortgages as a result of the use of a standard rate. [15170]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Government have for encouraging those currently claiming incapacity benefit to gain employment. [15175]

Mr. Denham: The Government strongly believes that work is the best form of welfare for people of working age. We are committed to improving opportunities for sick and disabled people who want to work, including those receiving incapacity benefits, and have set aside some £195 million from the Windfall Tax to fund this important programme. We will use this money to explore a range of approaches to identify and pursue the best ways of helping people with disabilities and long-term health problems to move into work, and to avoid becoming dependent on long-term incapacity benefits.

We are consulting with disability organisations and employers on our proposals. These include funding a number of innovative schemes to explore how best to help people move into work or stay in work; introducing personal advisers to help sick and disabled people to overcome barriers to work; an information campaign to improve knowledge of the existing help available to help people into work and to change attitudes of benefit recipients, employers and the public; and a programme of research and evaluation to develop our understanding of the client group and to determine the effect of our initiatives.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total spent on cold weather payments during the winter of 1996–97. [15178]

Mr. Denham: In the winter of 1996–97 almost five million Cold Weather Payments were made at a cost of £42 million.

Supported Housing

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has for consultation on the long term funding arrangements for supported housing; and if she will make a statement. [14901]

Ms Harman [pursuant to her reply, 5 November 1997, Official Report, c. 246]: Securing stable, sustainable long term funding arrangements for supported housing will take time. The Government are keen to take the views of those working in the field before making any decision. I am therefore setting out our objectives for the long term. These are:

A Government-wide approach;

Clarifying responsibilities for controlling, targeting, and prioritising public expenditure on services supporting people in their homes—avoiding gaps and overlaps between budgets;

Ensuring the funding system can respond to individuals' needs and enable support to be provided in different types of accommodation and tenures;

Avoiding the possibility that accommodation choices may be distorted by the availability and interaction of different funding (this may result from the inter action of demand-led and cash-limited funding streams);

Encouraging coherent and transparent planning, funding and accountability arrangements—at the appropriate level—for support services in the context of wider community care and related programmes;

Compatibility with the Government's wider social policy objectives;

Encouraging the most cost effective approach across all sectors which takes account of all public expenditure costs; group and wider funding responsibilities, and links with other changes that authorities face;

Giving landlords confidence to make accommodation available to vulnerable people and to develop new provision;

Practicality—identifying solutions that are workable at central and local levels which could be implemented reasonably simply, considering what transitional arrangements might be necessary.

Departmental Officials will be contacting over two hundred individuals and organisations who responded to last year's Social Security Advisory Committee consultation. The Committee's report was published last week. We shall now ask respondents for their views on how best to translate these objectives into a modern, practical and sustainable funding system for this valuable social provision. Others who may wish to contribute to the debate are welcome to do so. Representations will be taken up to 5 December 1997.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ibrahim Sey

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken following the unlawful killing verdict at the inquest of Ibrahim Sey; and if he will make a statement. [14481]

Mr. Michael: An inquest jury concluded that Mr. Sey's death was by unlawful killing. The cause of the death was found to be postural asphyxia and excited delirium. Concern about the use of CS gas has been expressed in press reports, and Counsel for Mr. Sey's family expressed concern about the possible role of CS but no evidence was submitted to show that CS contributed to Mr. Sey's death. There is nothing in the Coroner's comments to attribute Mr. Sey's death to the use of CS. The Coroner recommended changes to training, and that all police forces should review the use of CS sprays.

The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the Metropolitan Police have taken note of and reviewed the Coroner's recommendations and responded positively and immediately to them. This includes issuing clear instructions on how to deal with postural asphyxia and acute exhaustive mania in the near future.

After considering the implications, including the safety of the public and his officers, the Commissioner has decided that it is appropriate for CS spray to be issued to all Metropolitan Police officers. The use of CS spray will be carefully monitored by the Metropolitan Police.

In view of the large number of officers involved in the incident, the Metropolitan Police are considering to whom the verdict applies. This is complicated by the fact that it is not the role of an inquest to apportion blame to individuals. The Metropolitan Police have removed ten police officers from operational duty until their individual positions can be established.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 4 June (Ref. 5345038). [15351]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I sent an interim reply to my hon. Friend on 25 June and a final reply on 10 November.

Casinos

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the regulation of advertising by the casino industry. [14917]

Mr. George Howarth: Under section 42 of the Gaming Act 1968, casinos may not advertise their location or facilities.

We are considering the proposals for partial relaxation of the ban on advertising set out in the November 1996 consultation paper "Second Consultation on Casino Deregulation". We will announce the outcome of our consideration in due course.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the expansion of the casino industry into other geographical areas in the United Kingdom. [14918]

Mr. George Howarth: Regulations made under the Gaming Act 1968 confine the licensing of casinos to 53 permitted areas in Great Britain; 116 casinos were operating there on 31 March 1997.

The previous Government consulted on proposals to designate additional permitted areas. We are considering whether new permitted areas are desirable in principle. We will make our conclusions known in due course.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the level of trade union organisation in the casino industry. [14916]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government have no separate figures on trade union organisation or membership in the casino industry.

Exports Initiative

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the decision was taken to end the Home Office Exports Initiative; and when it will be terminated. [14960]

Mr. Michael: The decision to end the Home Office Exports Initiative was taken in July. It was terminated at the end of October.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of companies which will be affected by the decision to terminate the Home Office Exports Initiative. [14961]

Mr. Michael: During the period of the Exports Initiative, it is estimated that the Home Office Exports Promoter had dealings with some 80 companies, including those who participated in trade events sponsored by the Initiative. These companies, together with others in the policing and security sector, will continue to have access to the full range of overseas trade services of the Department of Trade and Industry and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the savings which will be made by abolishing the Home Office Exports Initiative. [14963]

Mr. Michael: The initiative had an annual budget of £100,000; approximately £40,000 of this will be saved in the current financial year.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has made for a scheme to replace the Home Office Exports Initiative. [14962]

Mr. Michael: The trade associations and companies in the policing and security sector will continue to have access to the full range of overseas trade services of the Department of Trade and Industry and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is considering what specific additional support for exporting may be provided for this sector.

Burglar Alarms

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the costs of false burglar alarm call-outs for each police force in England and Wales in each of the past three years. [14829]

Mr. Michael: The information requested is not collected centrally. I understand that last year the Association of Chief Police Officers introduced a policy to reduce false alarms by 10 per cent. per year over four years. In 1996–97, false calls fell by 12.2 per cent. and the target is likely to be met again in 1997–98.

Data Protection

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of the responses to the consultation paper, "Data Protection: the Government's Proposals." [14834]

Mr. George Howarth: I have placed the list in the Library.

Gaming Act 1968

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the proposal in the report of the Gaming Board for 1996–97 that there is a need for substantial reform of the Gaming Act 1968. [14915]

Mr. George Howarth: We are carefully considering this. The Government will make their intentions known in due course.

Metropolitan Police (Equal Opportunities)

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the staffing complement of the P2 branch of the Metropolitan Police service's equal opportunities unit; and if he will make a statement on its current level of staffing. [15024]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner informs me that there are five staff allocated to the Equal Opportunities Unit in the Metropolitan Police, P2 branch. I am told that the Unit is not carrying any vacancies and that the current level of staffing is considered appropriate to the work of the branch.

The Unit has some administrative responsibilities and advises senior managers and personnel managers in the Metropolitan Police on matters concerning equal opportunities and fairness relating both to police and civil staff. I am told that the Unit does not itself investigate cases. Investigations are carried out by the Complaints Investigation Bureau or Area Complaints Investigation Branches.

The responsibility for ensuring equality of opportunity through the Metropolitan Police rests with all members of the Service.

Post-release Support Services

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 July, Official Report, columns 3–4, if he will review the provision of post-release support services for long sentence prisoners whose convictions have been overturned by the Court of Appeal. [13088]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The support services to which my hon. Friend the Minister of State referred in his reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 28 July, Official Report, columns 3–4, are national and local voluntary organisations which provide help to prisoners on release. It is for those organisations, which are independent from government, to decide what services they are able to offer.

As my hon. Friend also mentioned, probation services are able to help with resettlement problems experienced by released prisoners. Since those who have had their convictions overturned would be free of any ties with the criminal justice system and its agencies, there is no statutory obligation for probation services to provide assistance to people in these circumstances. However, probation services can, and do, provide help on a voluntary basis. Again, it would be for the service concerned to decide what help it is able to offer in the particular circumstances. The Government currently have no plans to introduce any legislative requirements to compel probation services, or any other organisation, to provide support services to prisoners whose convictions have been overturned.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of (a) the numbers and (b) the percentages, of police officers according to their grade, by (i) gender and (ii) ethnic origin. [14979]

Mr. Michael: The latest available information is given in the table.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Quangos

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to make quangos more open, accountable and effective. [15848]

Dr. David Clark: The Government are determined to make quangos more accountable for what they do, more open in how they do it and more effective in achieving their aims. I am pleased to announce the publication today of the consultation paper "Opening up Quangos", which builds on the valuable work done by the Committee on Standards in Public Life under Lord Nolan's chairmanship.

Our proposals mark a new phase in opening up quangos to public scrutiny and making them more accountable to the people they serve. The Government's devolution policy will help to bring quangos in Scotland and Wales under the proper level of scrutiny that a modern democracy demands. Our purpose is the same for public bodies which operate on a United Kingdom or Great Britain basis, or an England or England and Wales basis. The proposals in the consultation paper will help to achieve this.

Copies of the consultation paper are being widely circulated and placed on the Internet, as well as in the House libraries. Copies will be sent personally to all right hon. and hon. Members. The results of the consultation exercise will be taken into account in the preparation of the Government's White Paper on Better Government, due to be published next year.

I am also pleased to announce the publication today of "The Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies 1997 Report", which summarises for the first time the main objectives and achievements of the larger executive non-departmental public bodies, charting their performance against key targets. This is the first of a series of annual publications that will develop in detail and coverage in future years and improve measurement of the performance of public bodies.

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list (a) the nature and value of contracts his Department has entered into and (b) discussions ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14958]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 7 November 1997]: The Cabinet Office, including the Office of Public Service and its agencies (Civil Service College, Property Advisers to the Civil Estate, Security Facilities Executive, the Buying Agency, Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency and Government Car and Despatch Agency) and the Central Office of Information, have no record of entering into any contracts or of holding any discussions with Monitor Consultancy since 1990.

PRIME MINISTER

Climate Change Conference

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Prime Minister what is the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the Climate Change Conference at Kyoto; and if he will make a statement. [15589]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Minister for the Environment, accompanied of officials, will represent the United Kingdom at the third Conference of the Parties to the Climate Change Convention.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what monitoring is undertaken of the ethnic balance among staff whose salaries are paid from the Civil List; and what estimate he has made of the proportion of such staff who are from ethnic minorities. [15432]

The Prime Minister: The Personnel Office at Buckingham Palace maintains records of the ethnic origin of all Royal Household employees including those whose salaries are paid from the Civil List. Currently approximately 3 per cent. of Civil List employees are from ethnic minorities. The Royal Household is an equal opportunities employer (that is to say appointment and promotion are on ability without regard to sex, ethnic origin or religion).

Minister without Portfolio

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if the forthcoming White Paper on Freedom of Information will consider the answering practices of the Minister without Portfolio. [14515]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 November 1997]: No.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the decision of the Minister without Portfolio to give no information in respect of conversations, meetings or other engagements undertaken in pursuance of his duties as Minister without Portfolio and its consistency with parliamentary accountability. [14523]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 November 1997]: No.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list all (a) secondary, (b) other delegated legislation and (c) all deregulation orders his Department made during the summer adjournment. [14377]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 216.

Millennium Projects

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the educational benefits of the millennium projects. [13396]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Millennium Commission has always been committed to supporting projects which provide access to information and sources of learning, and education has emerged as one of five key themes in the Commission's grant programmes. For example, over £33 million has been offered in grant to the new University for the Highlands and Islands, and most of the larger funded projects have a major educational element. The Government intends that the Millennium Experience and its associated national programme will have a significant educational aspect for visitors and participants, as well as being entertaining. It is envisaged that the Dome at Greenwich will become the hub of a new national digital network for learning.

Sports Broadcasting

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received concerning changes to the listing of sports events for broadcast on terrestrial television channels; and if he will make a statement. [14982]

Mr. Fisher: Since the current review of the listed events was announced in May, some 609 representations have been received on this subject, including 18 letters from hon. Members. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be making a statement shortly.

Violent Films

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received on the showing of violent films on national television, with particular reference to "Natural Born Killers"; and if he will make a statement. [14812]

Mr. Fisher: The Department has received 17 letters about violence on television in the last three months. One of the letters received this month referred specifically to the film "Natural Born Killers" to be shown on Channel 5 on 8 November.

A working party established by the broadcasting regulators is currently pursuing initiatives to meet public concern about the portrayal of violence and I understand [illegible] its conclusions early in the [illegible]

National Libraries Week

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps the Government are taking to support National Libraries Week. [14980]

Mr. Fisher: The Government wholeheartedly supports National Libraries Week and has been actively involved with the preparations for it. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to all MPs to publicise National Libraries Week, and to encourage them to become involved in library events in their constituencies. He also launched the Week at the House of Commons on Monday 3 November. DCMS Ministers have subsequently been involved in a number of other related events during the Week.

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list (a) the nature an value of contracts his Department has entered into and (b) discussions Ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14947]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 7 November 1997]: My Department was established in 1992 and since that date has not let any contracts, nor held any discussions, with the Monitor Consultancy.

Tennis

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the number of tennis clubs in England during each of the last 25 years. [15147]

Mr. Banks: According to the Lawn Tennis Association's (LTA) Survey of 1996, there are a total of 3,200 tennis clubs in England of which 2,400 are affiliated to the LTA. This compares against 2,700 LTA affiliated clubs 25 years ago.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much lottery funding has been provided to local tennis clubs to secure the freehold purchase of their existing grounds. [15151]

Mr. Banks: The English Sports Council has made awards totalling £184,649, to two tennis clubs to assist with the freehold purchase of their existing grounds.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for culture, Media and Sport how many people in England he estimates play tennis; and what have been the trends over the last 25 years. [15150]

Mr. Banks: According to the Lawn Tennis Association's (LTA) Survey of 1996, there are 4.5 million people who play tennis in England, of which 1.75 million play regularly (once a fortnight or more). I understand that the LTA have not kept records of tennis participation levels for the last 25 years.

Sports Clubs

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the minimum length of [illegible]

Mr. Banks: The minimum length of leasehold required is dependent on the size of the award, as follows:

	Years
Up to £5,000	3
£5,001–£10,000	5
£10,001–£15,000	7
£15,001–£25,000	10
£25,001–£35,000	12
£35,001–£50,000	15
More than £50,000	21

British Academy for Sport

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he plans to announce the location of the British Academy for Sport. [14420]

Mr. Banks: We hope to make an announcement on the location shortly.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on anomalies within the current concessionary television licence scheme. [14435]

Mr. Fisher: The regulations governing the concessionary scheme give rise to a number of real and perceived anomalies. However, changes at the margins of the scheme, to address such anomalies, would most likely create new ones and would do little to improve the public acceptability of the scheme. The current Agreement between the Government and the BBC specifies that the licence fee system will continue until 2002. In reviewing the arrangements for funding the BBC after the year 2002 we shall also comprehensively examine the concessionary arrangements. In the meantime, the Department for Culture, Media and Sport has produced a simplified explanatory leaflet on the concessionary scheme, which explains the qualifying criteria for the concession and answers some common questions about the scheme. Copies of the leaflet have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact of withdrawal of tobacco sponsorship on sport; and if he will make a statement. [14904]

Mr. Banks: We are looking very carefully at how best to achieve an end to the advertising and promotion of tobacco at sports events in a way which will minimise any damage to the sports concerned. Discussions are underway within Government on how best to achieve this and I am consulting the sports concerned. Plans include a transitional period. The Government will publish a White Paper next year setting out measures to tackle tobacco consumption.

After considering the issue of sponsorship in great depth the Government has proposed excluding Formula One from the scope of the proposed EU Directive on pursuing twin objectives of reducing smoking and of safeguarding sport from any effects arising from the loss of tobacco sponsorship. The fact is that a blanket Europe-wide ban on Formula One sponsorship would not only mean fewer Grand Prix in Europe, but also, perversely, more tobacco advertising on our TV screens beamed in from events outside the European Union.

Television Licences (Hotels)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how many hotel television licences have been issued in each year since 1990; and what was the total revenue received by the BBC from hotel television licences for each of these years; [14566]

(2) what steps his Department is taking to prevent the evasion of television licensing regulations by the proprietors of hotels; [14568]

(3) what estimate he has made of the revenue lost to the BBC through the evasion of television licensing regulations by hotels. [14567]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 10 November 1997]: Records of television licence fee revenue received from hotels are available only from 1991. Licence fee revenue from hotels since 1991 is:

Year	Number of hotel licences issued (000s)	Revenue (£ million)
1991–92	60	4.6
1992–93	58	4.7
1993–94	61	5.0
1994–95	65	5.5
1995–96	65	5.3
1996–97	66	6.1

Under the Broadcasting Act 1990, the BBC has been responsible for the administration of the television licensing system since April 1991. We understand from the BBC that no separate estimate is available of the cost of television licence fee evasion by the hotel trade. The BBC's agent, TV Licensing, makes use of a national hotels database, in addition to standard enforcement procedures, to ensure compliance by hotels with the licensing regulations, and new guidance issued to TV Licensing's enquiry officers includes specific instructions on hotels.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the guidelines or directives issued by the European Commission on the millennium computer problem; and if she will make a statement. [13156]

Mrs. Roche: No guidelines have been issued by the Commission.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the call on departmental budgets required to carry out the

Mrs. Roche: Each department is responsible for dealing with the Year 2000 problem affecting its own computers. Within core DTI the cost of dealing with the problem is estimated at £2.7m which will be found from existing PES provision. Agencies are responsible for their own programmes of work.

Banking Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what meetings have taken place between members of her Department and representatives of the United Bank Ltd. in 1997 to date; [14971]

(2) what meetings have taken place between members of her Department and representatives of the Banking Insurance and Finance Union to date. [14972]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Members of my Department hold meetings with a wide range of organisations. Details of these meetings and the matters discussed are not held centrally. The information requested could therefore only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received regarding the industrial dispute in the United Bank Ltd. [14970]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department has received some representations from the Banking Insurance and Finance Union about this dispute.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the Government's policy towards employment relations in banks. [14976]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Employment relations in banks, as elsewhere, are a matter for the management and employees concerned.

Patents

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many proposals were patented in each year since 1990; and how many have been taken up. [15165]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Since 1990 the United Kingdom Patent Office has granted patents as follows:

Year	Total	UK applications
1990	9,396	3,265
1991	9,346	3,307
1992	9,421	3,331
1993	8,330	3,019
1994

During the same period, the European Patent Office granted the patents covering the United Kingdom under the European Patent Convention, to which the United Kingdom is a signatory, as follows:

Year	Total	UK applications
1990	22,783	1,096
1991	24,729	1,186
1992	28,407	1,311
1993	34,256	1,470
1994	39,242	1,705
1995	38,877	1,596
1996	37,203	1,585

Information on which of these has been commercially exploited is not available, and could not be compiled at reasonable cost. However, during this period the following total numbers of patents covering the UK were renewed, perhaps indicating commercial exploitation:

Year	Total
1990	230,994
1991	227,220
1992	228,665
1993	222,897
1994	230,566
1995	243,732
1996	256,991

A breakdown of this table to cover UK applicants could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Professional Qualifications

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons the Institute of Financial Accountants qualifications were not included in the list of professional qualifications in the European Communities (Recognition of Professional Qualifications) Regulations 1991; and if she will list (a) those professions and (b) professional qualifications which are recognised in EU countries under the Regulations. [14934]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Statutory Instrument 1991 No. 824 lists professions which are regulated by law or public authority in the UK and professional titles awarded by bodies incorporated by Royal Charter. Since the Institute of Financial Accountants does not fall within those categories it is not necessary for its qualifications to be listed in the Statutory Instrument.

The list of professions and titles in Statutory Instrument 1991 No. 824 is not intended to be exhaustive. The EU Directives dealing with mutual recognition of professional qualifications lay down rules which apply to the recognition of all professional qualifications (including those relevant to the Institute of Financial Accountants) whether or not listed in internal legislation of Member States.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list each of the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team since 2 May, specifying in each case (a) the participating Minister or Ministers, (b) the destination of the trip, (c) the purpose of the trip and (d) the cost of the trip; and if he will make a statement. [15256]

Mr. Hoon: The following overseas visits have been made by Ministers in the Lord Chancellor's Department since 2 May:

1. (a) participating Minister: The Lord Chancellor, accompanied by a Private Secretary and Press Officer

(b) destination: Hong Kong

(c) purpose of trip: to express confidence in the HKSAR's enthusiasm to continue the Basic Law as expressed in the Joint Declaration in 1984. This stated that:

> "The Hong Kong Special Administrative Region will be vested with executive, legislative and independent judicial powers, including that of final adjudication. The laws currently in force in Hong Kong will remain basically unchanged".

In particular, the Lord Chancellor discussed with the Chief Justice of Hong Kong arrangements for making sitting Law Lords available from the UK to sit judicially in Hong King. He also met leading politicians representing all the main interests in Hong Kong.

(d) cost of the trip: £17,186.53

2. (a) participating Minister: Mr. Geoff Hoon, accompanied by a Private secretary and an official.

(b) destination: Strasbourg and Potsdam

(c) purpose of the trip: to participate in discussions on the European Court of Human Rights following implementation of Protocol 11 to the ECHR and to have discussions with MEPs and others on legal matters concerning the forthcoming UK Presidency of the EU.

(d) cost of the trip: £2,560.30

Public Record Office

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many documents deemed appropriate for release for public scrutiny are currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office by the Department of origin. [14451]

Mr. Hoon: The Question concerns a specific operational matter on which the Chief Executive of the Public Record Office is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the Chief Executive to reply direct.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 7 November 1997:

PQ 98/335: Documents withdrawn from the Public Record Office by the Department of Origin

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply for the Public Record Office to your question about the above.

Four thousand six hundred and fifty documents are currently temporarily withdrawn from the Public Record Office by the department of origin, as authorised by section 4(6) of the Public Records Act, 1958. Most of these documents are deemed appropriate for release for public scrutiny and even when temporarily withdrawn can be made available on demand by a member of the public for consultation in our reading rooms or in the withdrawing department. However I regret that we do not separately enumerate the documents in this category.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Kirkby Stephen Bypass

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the inspector's report on the Kirkby Stephen bypass was seen by Ministers before publication was abandoned. [14172]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The inspectors report on the Kirkby Stephen Bypass proposal is still under consideration by the Secretary of State as he has received no formal notification that the proposal has been abandoned.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what communication or discussion there has been between Ministers or officials in his Department and councillors or officials of Cumbria County Council over the handling of the inspector's report on the Kirkby Stephen bypass. [14171]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1997]: There has been no communication or discussion between Ministers and representatives of Cumbria County Council. County Council officials have recently enquired of my officials the position regarding the Inspector's report in the event of the statutory Orders for the scheme being withdrawn. My officials are awaiting formal notification from the County Council of its intentions in relation to the future of the scheme. However, I can tell the right hon. Member that, in the event of the statutory Orders being withdrawn, in line with Departmental policy the Secretary of State would propose to publish the report.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations his Department received relating to publication of the inspector's report on the Kirkby Stephen bypass. [14173]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1997]: My Department has received a verbal representation from Cumbria County Council officials in relation to this matter. No other representations have been received.

Public Inquiry Reports

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when was the last occasion on which his Department did not publish the report of an inspector following a public inquiry. [14170]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The Government have never failed to publish an Inspectors Report following a Public Inquiry into Local Highway Authority Orders.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what compensation payments would have been required to have been made, and to whom, had the decision to proceed with the Birmingham Northern Relief Road not been taken. [13778]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1997]: As Section 1(4) of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 requires, the Birmingham Northern Relief Road Concession Agreement makes provision in certain circumstances for compensation payments to the Concessionaire. Under the Agreement signed in February 1992 by the previous Government the detailed provisions about compensation payments were agreed to be commercially confidential.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what compensation payments are payable to the Government in the event that Midland Expressway Ltd. decide to withdraw from the concession agreement to construct and operate the Birmingham Northern Relief Road. [13777]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1997]: As Section 1(5) of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 requires, the Birmingham Northern Relief Road Concession Agreement makes provision in certain circumstances for compensation payments to the Government. Under the Agreement signed in February 1992 by the previous Government the detailed provisions about compensation payments were agreed to be commercially confidential.

Local Authority Funding

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy (a) to return to a needs-based capital approvals allocation system and (b) that any increased capital allocation will be made to local authorities via basic credit approvals. [14196]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government are carrying out a Comprehensive Spending Review, a root and branch review of public spending in all Government Departments. Conclusions will emerge in new spending plans and in new policies reflecting the Government's priorities next year. In parallel with this, we have set up a review to look at the future arrangements for local authority finance, in close collaboration with local government and representative organisations. This will include consideration of capital allocation systems and options for local authority support for capital expenditure. We will be consulting widely from late Autumn on particular aspects of the system and plan to issue a White Paper in the Spring on our policies for local government in England, including finance, best value and democratic renewal.

In 1998–99 we have agreed that the HIP allocations will be based on 50 per cent. on need, whereas previously it had been intended that 100 per cent. of the allocation would be subject to ministerial discretion. We have also agreed that the allocation of Supplementary Credit Approvals under our Capital Receipts Initiative should be made on the basis of 66 per cent. reflecting need.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the likely date for completion of the channel tunnel rail link; and if he will make a statement. [14555]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Development Agreement, the construction of the CTRL is the responsibility of London and Continental Railways Ltd. I understand from LCR that they expect to complete the CTRL during 2003.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make the first payment to London and Continental Railways under the agreement under the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Act 1996. [14551]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government's contract with LCR provides for the first instalment of capital grant to be paid when LCR have completed 68 per cent. of the CTRL by value. I understand from LCR that they expect the first instalment of grant will fall due during 2001.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the difference between the actual passenger numbers on Eurostar in 1996–97 and the Government's estimate for that period when it was handed over to London and Continental Railways. [14552]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the 1996 calendar year Eurostar carried 4.9 million passengers on the London-Paris/Brussels routes and in the first nine months of 1997 they have carried 4.54 million passengers. This represents a 20 per cent. increase on the same period for 1996. The previous Government made no estimates of future Eurostar patronage at the time of transfer of the business to London and Continental Railways.

Housing (Wheelchair Access)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extent Part M of the Building Regulations. [14497]

Mr. Raynsford: I plan to make a statement shortly on the extension of Part M of the Building Regulations to new dwellings.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many homes have been constructed in each of the last five years that do not meet the standards set out for accessibility by disabled people under the terms of the changes proposed in 1995 to Part M of the Building Regulations. [14498]

Mr. Raynsford: It is not possible to give a full assessment of how many homes do, or do not, meet the standards of accessibility proposed in 1995 as it is not possible to quantify homes constructed in the private sector which have incorporated accessibility for disabled people on a voluntary basis. As a broad indication, however, a comparison can be made between total housing completions in Great Britain and homes completed by Housing Associations, or registered social landlords, where Housing Corporation Housing Development Scheme Standards will have applied. Those standards provide accessibility for disabled people comparable to the changes proposed to the Building Regulations in 1995. The relevant figures for the last five years are:

	Total completions (thousands)	Housing Association completions (thousands)
1992	171.9	26.3
1993	178.5	35.4
1994	186.0	36.7
1995	190.7	38.4
1996	179.0	31.5
1997 (Q1, 2 and 3)	133.9	20.2

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average waiting time for social housing for people requiring a home built to wheelchair standards. [14500]

Mr. Raynsford: Information on average waiting times for social housing is not collected centrally.

In 1991, the former Department of the Environment carried out research into access into local authority housing. The research included a very small number of applicants requiring a home built to wheelchair standards. Their average waiting time was 21 months.

However, the research did not cover access to housing association accommodation. Since 1988, housing associations have been key providers of homes built to wheelchair standards.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the percentage of homes to be constructed using the capital receipts that will (a) be accessible to disabled people and (b) meet wheelchair standards under the terms of the extension proposed in 1995 of Part M of the Building Regulations. [14499]

Mr. Raynsford: It is not possible to estimate the percentage of homes constructed using capital receipts that will be accessible to disabled people as the use made of capital receipts is at the discretion of local authorities. However, where local authorities choose to use capital receipts to support registered social landlords normal Housing Corporation Development Scheme Standards will apply. Those standards provide accessibility for disabled people comparable with the 1995 proposals for extending Part M of the Building Regulations to new dwellings, including accessibility for wheelchair users for the purposes of visitability.

London Underground

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for the future of London Underground. [14701]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are considering a wide range of options for public-private partnerships for London Underground, while ruling out wholesale privatisation. The options being considered were detailed in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), Official Report, 3 November 1997 column 67.

Minister for London and Construction (Visits)

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the towns and cities outside the United Kingdom visited by the Minister for London and Construction and the dates on which the visits took place since 1 May. [15025]

Mr. Raynsford: From 27 to 31 August, I visited New York, Boston and Washington, USA on a fact finding trip to learn about the US experience of Mayoral systems and to speak at the American Political Science Association Conference. On 24 and 25 September, I attended the EU Housing Ministers' meeting in Amsterdam. Between 3 and 10 October, I led a construction trade delegation of 17 British companies to promote British trade overseas. The delegation visited Amman and Aqaba in Jordan and Sharm El Sheikh and Cairo in Egypt. On 17 October, I visited Cologne in Germany to meet the Mayor of Cologne and discuss German Mayoral systems, from 6 to 9 November, I visited Madrid and Barcelona in Spain to learn about Spanish experiences of Mayoral systems and also to speak at the 1st Conference of the European Federation of Town Centres on Town centre management.

Pavements

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance to local authorities concerning the exercise of their powers to keep pavements free of advertising boards and goods for sale. [14839]

Mr. Raynsford: There is sufficient guidance to local planning authorities on control of outdoor advertisements in the Department's Circular 5/92, using powers in the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations 1992. Local highway authorities have powers in the Highways Act 1980 to remove obstructions on pavements. Both planning and highway authorities must consider whether to exercise these powers on a case-by-case basis.

Consultants

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the consultancy firms and the directors of consultancy firms who are employed to work on best value pilots for local councils; and if he will make available details of these contracts. [14767]

Mr. Raynsford: Following a competitive tender, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has awarded a research contract worth £½ million to the Local Government Centre at Warwick University's Business School to conduct an evaluation of all the Best Value pilot schemes. The study, which will be directed by Dr. Steve Martin, with Professor John Benington in support, started in October of this year and will finish in Autumn 2000. Principal researchers on the study include Dr. Mike Geddes and Dr. Jean Hartley (of the Local Government Centre), Dr. Ian Sanderson (of the policy Research Institute, Leeds Metropolitan University) and Tony Bovaird (Aston Business School).

The details of any contracts entered into by individual local authorities are matters for those authorities.

Road Accidents

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many road accidents over the most recent annual period for which figures are available were (a) drink related and (b) drugs related. [14557]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 6 November 1997]: In 1996 there were 10,850 accidents involving death or injury in which at least one driver or motorcycle rider was over the legal limit. No comparable figures are available for drugs-related accidents. However the Department is currently one year into a three-year research programme to assess the incidence of drugs-driving and its implications for road safety.

Roads (Private Finance)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what support he is giving to local authorities to develop road schemes using private sector finance. [14774]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 7 November 1997]: My Department has taken a number of measures to facilitate local authority PFI projects, including highway and other transport schemes. These include the introduction of a Bill to clarify local authorities powers to enter into PFI contracts, consultation on a draft instrument to permit local authorities to delegate a range of highway functions and the release of model contract documents developed for Highways Agency roads.

Advance Corporation Tax

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the estimates of the financial costs of the changes made to ACT in July 1997 budget made by (a) Chelmsford Borough Council and (b) Essex County Council; [15071]

(2) what representations his Department has received in respect of making full compensation available to (a) Chelmsford Borough Council and (b) Essex County council for the impact that the changes to ACT will have on their budgets. [15073]

Mr. Raynsford: Representations have been received from the Local Government Association and several local authorities, including Essex County Council and Chelmsford Borough Council. The Local Government Association, with the support of my Department and the United Kingdom Steering Committee on Local Authority Pensions, is establishing by means of a national survey the impact of the Budget changes on local authority employers' pension costs. This information will be used to inform the actuarial valuations of each fund and how future employers' pension costs in Essex and elsewhere are affected. These factors, and any others which will emerge from the 1998 actuarial valuations, will be taken into account when the level of local authority provision is determined for 1999–2000 and for subsequent years.

Out-of-town Leisure Complexes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what his Department's policy is towards existing planning guidance in relation to large out of town leisure complexes which may impact on existing facilities; and what plans he has to issue new planning guidance to cover out-of-town leisure complexes; [14739]

(2) what plans he has to issue new planning guidance to minimise the disturbance to local residents caused by large out-of-town leisure complexes. [14738]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government are firmly committed to the objectives of Planning Policy Guidance Note 6: "Town Centres and Retail Developments", which seeks to sustain and enhance the vitality and viability of our existing city, town and district centres by making them the focus for investment, particularly in retail, office, leisure and other appropriate developments.

The Government propose to ensure that the approach in PPG6 is applied just as firmly to leisure developments as to retail developments. In applying the sequential approach to selecting sites, the Government will expect developers to demonstrate why they could not develop elements of a large scheme on more central sites, with less on-site car parking.

The current policy for leisure developments, therefore, consists of PPG6 and the Government Response to the Report of the Environment Committee (Cm 3729). We have no current plans to issue further guidance.

The Department will shortly be commissioning research on planning and leisure development. We will want to consider the implication of that research before considering whether guidance on this aspect needs to be amended.

Local planning authorities are required to determine planning applications in accordance with their development plans, unless other material considerations indicate otherwise. Factors such as the impact of large out-of-town leisure complexes on the neighbourhood are capable of being material planning considerations, and where appropriate, local planning authorities can impose conditions on planning permission to minimise such impacts.

Water Meters

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the hardship caused to pensioner one-person households who are unable to have water meters installed due to technical difficulties but are not entitled to rebates on their water rates; and if he will make a statement. [14097]

Angela Eagle: The Government are undertaking a review of the water charging system in England and Wales to ensure that it operates in a fair and equitable way. We have made clear our opposition to compulsory metering for essential household use under current arrangements, but we shall be looking at metering policy including the availability of meters to customers who wish to pay on a measured basis. The review will pay particular attention to the effect of present charging methods on special cases such as large households, single persons and low income households including pensioners.

Health Action Zones

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been his Department's role in developing the Government's proposals for health action zones. [14586]

Angela Eagle: We have been working closely with the Department of Health to encourage positive links between health action zones and other area-based programmes such as the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund. An official from the Department will sit on a national reference panel to advise on the bids.

Local Government Review

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate his Department has made of the total cost to date of all stages of the local government review process for (a) his Department (b) local councils in England. [14588]

Mr. Raynsford: The cost of the Local Government Commission, which undertook the structural review of Local Government between 1992 and 1997, was £21.261 million. Under the Local Government Re-organisation Costs Scheme the most recently available bids for transitional costs submitted by all reorganising authorities in respect of expenditure incurred between 1994–95 and 1997–98 total £439.152 million.

Utility Trenching

Ms Jennifer Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the impact of unregulated utility trenching on the environment in the west midlands. [14725]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, local highway authorities have a duty to co-ordinate utility street works and the utilities have a duty to co-operate with the highway authorities and with each other. The Act also imposes requirements as to the standard of reinstatements and as to signing and guarding of works in progress. The Government keep the working of the Act under review and expect to make changes to the associated secondary legislation from time to time.

Regional Development Agency, West Midlands

Ms Jennifer Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he will take to include the voluntary sector in the preliminary planning for a Regional Development Agency in the west midlands. [14724]

Mr. Caborn: In taking forward our proposals for Regional Development Agencies in England, we have closely involved all the key stakeholders in each region, including those from the voluntary sector. Detailed arrangements for the Regional Development Agencies will be set out in a White Paper on England's regions to be published in the next few weeks.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of the uniform business rate was paid by small and medium enterprises; and what was the uniform business rate per employee paid by (a) small and medium enterprises and (b) large companies in the last year for which figures are available. [14805]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held by the Department.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much revenue was raised by the uniform business rate in the last year for which figures are available. [14886]

Mr. Raynsford: Total contributions paid into the non-domestic rating pool for distribution back to local authorities was £11,471 million for 1995–96, the last year for which figures are available.

Street Trees

Ms Jennifer Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce an environmental impact appraisal system to assess the damage to trees on streets caused by (a) utility trenching, (b) roadworks, and (c) traffic disruption. [14726]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have no plans to introduce a general requirement for environmental appraisal in relation to street trees. However, in accordance with the Environmental Impact Assessment Directive (85/337/EEC), certain projects undertaken by utilities and highway authorities require such assessment where they are judged likely to have significant effects on the environment. In such cases, the developer must provide an Environmental Statement which includes, amongst other things, a description of any likely significant effects on trees and other flora.

Manufactured Sucrose Polymers

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what investigations he has undertaken into the environmental consequences of the entry of manufactured sucrose polymers into the Untied Kingdom food chain. [14937]

Angela Eagle: As far as I am aware, no investigations have been undertaken by this Department into the environmental consequences of the entry of manufactured sucrose polymers into the United Kingdom food chain.

Green Belt

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change the requirement for areas which consist mainly of green belt land to take their full quota of the requirement for new homes. [14763]

Mr. Raynsford: Government polices encourage local authorities to make full and effective use of land within existing urban areas. The Government have a national target of 50 per cent. of all new housing to be built on previously used land.

The Government's Green Belt policies remain as set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note 2. There is a presumption against inappropriate development in the Green Belt, except where there are very special circumstances justifying the proposal which outweigh the harm to the Green Belt. PPG2 emphasises that, once fixed, Green Belt boundaries should be changed only in exceptional circumstances. Any such changes proposed by a local planning authority would need to be subject to full public consultation. They must be advertised for a period of six weeks, during which anyone may lodge an objection. The planning authority have to consider all the objections and representations made to them. An inquiry must then be held, unless none of the objectors wish to take part. In addition my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minster would need to be satisfied that all opportunities for development within the urban areas contained by or beyond the Green Belt had been fully considered.

A40 (Cheltenham)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will exempt from the trunk road review the scheme to detrunk the A40 through Cheltenham; and if he will make a statement. [14903]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The consultation exercise at present taking place as part of the trunk road review specifically invites views on the size and role of the network and whether some trunk roads should be transferred to local authorities or vice versa. In these circumstances I think that I would be premature to proceed with consideration of a specific proposal, such as detrunking the A40 through Cheltenham, before we have concluded the review.

Housing Corporation

Ms Jennifer Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the directors of the Housing Corporation, indicating the tenure of their directorships, their remuneration and the qualifications which led to their appointments. [14730]

Mr. Raynsford: In making appointments to the Board of the Housing Corporation, candidates are sought who, in addition to their individual areas of expertise and knowledge, are able to take a broad view of housing policy and related issues. Candidates should be able to contribute usefully in directing a major Non-Departmental Public Body and to make constructive contributions to the development of social housing policy at the national level. The Board needs members with a range of skills and expertise extending from knowledge of finance and regulation to an understanding of how housing policy impacts on other areas of social welfare.

Council Houses, Bromsgrove

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much more of its own reserves Bromsgrove district council will be permitted to spend on council house improvements in the current financial year and in each of the next three years under the terms set out in the Local Government Finance (Supplementary Credit Approvals) Bill. [14762]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government Finance (Supplementary Credit Approvals) Act 1997 provides for a local authority's set-aside capital receipts to be taken into account when Supplementary Credit Approvals are distributed. The Act underpins the Government's Capital Receipts Initiative under which Bromsgrove District Council is entitled to receive Supplementary Credit Approvals to the value of £188,000 in 1997–98, and £564,000 in 1998–99. These resources may be used to support housing and housing associated regeneration works. In the first instance, however, it is for individual councils to decide on priorities in their area. Longer-term funding arrangements under the Initiative are being considered in our Comprehensive Spending Review.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the transposition of European Council directive 96/29/Euratom on basic radiation safety standards on the current nuclear waste management strategy of the United Kingdom. [14715]

Angela Eagle: Directive 96/29/Euratom lays down basic safety standards for the health protection of the general public and workers against the dangers of ionising radiation. It updates standards set for these areas by previous Directives. The new Directive is required to be implemented into United Kingdom law by 13 May 2000. The precise manner of implementation is currently being considered by Government.

Housing Associations

Ms Jennifer Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many housing associations have been registered by the Housing Corporation since May 1992; and what proportion of them were housing co-operatives. [14709]

Mr. Raynsford: Since May 1992 a total of 163 social landlords have been registered with the Housing Corporation; 16 per cent. (26) of these were housing co-operatives.

Drink-Driving

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce a lower permitted maximum alcohol blood level for drivers of road vehicles. [15038]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are currently considering a number of measures to combat drink-driving, including the case for reducing the present maximum permitted blood-alcohol level for drivers.

Derelict Sites

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates he has made, by county, of the number of derelict sites in England; and how many of these sites were formerly used for (i) sport and (ii) recreation. [15155]

Mr. Raynsford: The latest information is from a survey of derelict land undertaken in 1993, which provides estimates of the area of derelict land by type of dereliction at county and district level. This information is included in Table 5 of "Survey of Derelict Land in England 1993 Volume 2—Reference Tables", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library. There is no information available on the number of derelict sites at county level.

Derelict land is defined as

"land so damaged by industrial or other development that it is incapable of beneficial use without treatment".

It is unlikely that sites formerly used for sport and recreation would fall under this definition, and such sites were not separately classified within the types of dereliction recorded.

The Department's Land Use Change Statistics for England show that from 1985 to 1992, some 640 hectares of land previously used for outdoor recreation, or leisure and recreational buildings, became vacant or derelict. However, in some cases this will have been an intermediate stage before redevelopment.

Rail Grants

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the breakdown was by region of (a) freight facilities grants and (b) track access grants in the most recent available year; and if he will make a statement. [15313]

It is not possible to allocate track access grants to specific regions since the grant aided traffic traverses more than one region and, in one case, all regions. Awards of track access grant are paid over a number of years; in 1996–97 £12.3 million was paid to five claimants.

The Government are committed to encouraging greater take-up of grants from all regions.

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the 1996–97 financial year seven rail and one inland waterways freight facilities grants were awarded in England:

Region	Number of awards	Value of awards £
East Midlands	2 (rail)	1,335,472
Yorkshire and Humber	2 (rail)	509,787
North West	1 (rail)	230,805
North East	1 (rail)	402,029
London	1 (rail)	1,904,032
South East	1 (Inland Waterways grant)	47,338

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what the total amount of money available is under the home energy efficiency scheme in the current winter to help meet the cost of loft, tank and pipe insulation, draught proofing and energy advice; [15177]

(2) what is the maximum award available under the home energy efficiency scheme. [15176]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 10 November 1997]: The Home Energy Efficiency Scheme helps vulnerable families keep warmer and use less energy by paying grant, to a maximum of £315, towards the cost of improving the energy efficiency standards of their homes. The measures available are loft insulation, cavity wall insulation, controls for heating systems, draught proofing, energy efficient lamps and water tank insulation. In addition, personal advice on energy use is offered. The scheme is open to householders who receive income-related benefits, disability allowances or are aged 60 or over; £75.1 million has been allocated to it in 1997–98. Expenditure is spread evenly throughout the year for maximum efficiency. I shall review the scheme shortly to check that it is helping the people who need it most. I will also ensure that it complements effectively the home insulation schemes to assist pensioners which I expect to emerge from our Capital receipts and Environment Task Force initiatives.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the landfill sites where disposal of (a) clinical waste, (b) radioactive waste and (c) special waste is permitted, and where no liner is in place within the landfill site. [14525]

Angela Eagle: Site licences and supporting information is available on the public register. The information is not available in the form requested. However, the Environment Agency is undertaking work to provide a fuller response, and I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Baker: To aske the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many landfill sites have been in operation in England in each of the last 10 years; and how many, in each year, have operated with no liner in place on all part of the site. [14526]

Angela Eagle: There are currently a total of 1,838 sites of which 256 are notes as lined or leachate managed and 1,582 where liner and leachate management is not mentioned. Some of these sites may, however, be lined or leachate managed. Data for site licences prior to 1997 are also publicly available, but additional time would be needed to undertake the numerical analysis as these data were originally collected by the individual waste regulation authorities—prior to the establishment of the Environment Agency in April 1996. The information could not, therefore, be obtained other than at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions at what percentage of landfill sites in England the methane produced is used to feed electricity into the national grid. [14530]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency is responsible for waste regulation in England and Wales. Separate figures are not immediately available for England. However, 499 landfill sites in England and Wales accept significant amounts of biodegradable waste which will generate methane; 108 of these sites extract the methane gas and flare it; 52 sites utilise the methane they extract to produce electricity. This represents 10.4 per cent. of the sites that are capable of producing methane.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in what circumstances landfill sites are allowed to operate with no liner. [14531]

Angela Eagle: Any planning permission or site licence granted for landfill in the past 10 years will have been based on a site specific risk assessment, which will have established the need for, and specification and performance standard of, a liner system. This accords with the guidance provided in Waste Management Paper 26B. There will be examples where the risk assessment confirms that no liner or specific containment system is necessary in order to achieve the required environmental protection. In these cases the site can operate without a liner. Considerations will include the nature of the wastes and prediction of degradation processes (inert or biodegradable wastes), site characteristics (natural clay containment of fissured limestone) and proposed after use. The approach is therefore based on the concept of deriving design performance standards through the use of probabilistic risk assessment, to estimate an acceptable impact on the surrounding environment.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the total waste disposal in each year since 1986 (i) in absolute terms and (ii) per head of population and (b) the percentage of waste in each year since 1986 which has been (1) landfilled, (2) incinerated and (3) recycled. [14527]

Angela Eagle: Annually updated information has not been collated centrally on a regular basis for the disposal of all controlled waste streams. Best estimates of the proportion of controlled wastes, excluding sewage sludge and dredged spoils going to each of the main waste management options in 1990 are given in the table:

Type of waste	Landfill	Incineration	Recycled/re-used
Household	90	5	5
Commercial	85	7.5	7.5
Construction and demolition	63	0	30
Other industrial	73	1	18
Total	70	2	21

In a new survey of household and municipal waste carried out by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Welsh Office, local authorities in England and Wales reported that 83 per cent. of municipal waste was disposed of to landfill, almost 10 per cent. was incinerated, about half of that with energy recovery and about 7 per cent. was recycled.

Information on the disposal of sewage sludge is published annually in the "Digest of Environmental Statistics". Typically in recent years approximately 10 per cent. of sewage sludge was disposed of to landfill and around 5 per cent. was incinerated. A further 8 to 10 per cent. was used beneficially in land reclamation and soil and compost products.

Recycling

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of mandatory deposits on containers. [14528]

Angela Eagle: The Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997 were introduced earlier this year to implement the requirements of Directive 94/62/EC on Packaging and Packaging Waste, including the achievement of the recovery and recycling targets it sets down. Based on the "polluter pays" principle, the UK Regulations therefore place obligations on producers of packaging waste to ensure the recovery and recycling of a proportion of the UK's packaging waste to meet a minimum recovery target (including recycling) of 50 per cent. and minimum recycling targets for each material of 15 per cent. by 2001.

Deposit and return systems are one means by which producers of packaging can ensure access to reusable or recoverable packaging in order to discharge their obligations under the Regulations. However, the Government has no plans to make this mandatory.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent assessment he has made of the net environmental impact of using new as against recycled paper. [14532]

Angela Eagle: There is a substantial amount of research into this issue. We shall be assessing the results of this research in due course.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions he has had with (a) manufacturer and (b) retailers to encourage the reuse of containers; [14533]

(2) what discussions he had with burger retailers in respect of the environmental impact caused by burger containers. [14534]

Angela Eagle: Since 1993, there have been extensive discussions with the packaging industry and with businesses using packaging to devise a system for achieving higher levels of recovery and recycling of packaging waste.

In July 1993 the previous Government launched their Producer Responsibility challenge to industry to find ways of increasing the amount of waste being recovered in the UK. Throughout 1995, the then Department of the Environment consulted widely on seven industry options for the form of a legal obligation on businesses to recover and recycle packaging waste. After much debate, the former Government accepted that the shared approach put forward in the industry agreement of 15 December 1995 was the option that attracted the broadest industry consensus. Following consultation between July and September 1996, the then Secretary of State for the Environment—right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer)—laid draft Regulations before Parliament, and on 6 March 1997 the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997 came into force.

Under these Regulations, businesses are required to recover and recycle specified tonnages of packaging waste based on the amount of packaging handled by the business in the previous calendar year. Businesses can meet their obligations on their own or by joining a business-led compliance scheme and six compliance schemes have so far been registered with the Environment Agencies to help businesses meet their obligations.

The Regulations place three main obligations on certain businesses which manufacture packaging raw materials, convert materials into packaging, fill packaging with goods or sell packaging. Importers are also obliged. Thus, retailing businesses, including burger retailers, will be required to assess the tonnage of packaging handled by their business and calculate a tonnage obligation which they must recover; they must also recycle a minimum tonnage of each material. Because the obligation is tonnage-based, businesses have a strong cost incentive to minimise the amount of packaging that they use as well as to minimise the amount of packaging waste.

The Regulations include an incentive to re-use packaging by allowing businesses to leave out of the calculation of their obligations any tonnage of packaging that they are re-using. Packaging which is used for the first time will attract recovery and recycling obligations. By re-using containers, businesses will be able to reduce the tonnage of packaging waste which they are required to recover and recycle and thus also reduce their costs.

I recently announced that a Producer Responsibility Forum is being set up to provide a broader forum for those who are affected by the Regulations to come and discuss various issues of interest. This will being together, for example, business, local authorities, the waste industry and the Environment Agencies.

The Government have supported the case for periodic review of the Regulations. My right hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, West and Royton (Mr. Meacher) has therefore announced his proposals for a two staged review of the Regulations—Departmental News Release number 204. Further discussions will therefore be continuing with manufacturer, fillers, retailers and importers of packaging, as well as others affected by the Regulations.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what evaluation he has made of the length of journey by car from home to recycling point which negates the environmental benefit of recycling the average amount recycled per journey, assuming recycling to be the only purpose of each journey. [14536]

Angela Eagle: Circumstances affecting the degree of environmental benefit from recycling vary throughout the country. Determining the length of journey which negates this effect is therefore an extremely complex matter. Any average figure given would almost certainly be incorrect for any one particular situation.

There have been a number of studies into this question that have employed Life Cycle Analysis and Economic Valuation techniques. One such study from Coopers and Lybrand, for example, found that on average a 10 per cent. increase in the distance of a car journey to the bring site reduced the environmental benefits of recycling by 0.7 per cent. However, the number of assumptions made to arrive at this conclusion are considerable.

The Government are keen to encourage the development of a network of recycling points and kerbside collection schemes such that special car journeys are rendered unnecessary. The target in Making Waste Work is that there should be easily accessible recycling facilities for 80 per cent. of households by 2000.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the percentages of (a) glass, (b) paper, (c) aluminium cans and (d) steel cans recycled in each European Union country for each year from 1986 to date. [14537]

Angela Eagle: Figures for paper and glass from 1986 to 1995, from the OECD Environmental Data Report, 1997 are set out in the attached tables. However, definitions may vary from one country to another and the figures may not be directly comparable. In particular, the recycling rates may be based on total amounts of waste produced, rather than total apparent consumption.

Published figures for aluminium and steel cans are not readily available.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his decision in respect of the appeal by Orange PCS Ltd. for a telecommunications mast on land at Gun Hill Industrial Estate, Dedham (Ref. COL/96/1259) if he will make a statement on its compatibility with planning guidance for masts in or near areas of outstanding natural beauty and other sensitive areas. [15349]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend issued his decision allowing a telecommunications mast at Gun Hill, Essex, on 28 October 1997. The reasons for allowing the appeal were set out in the decision letter, which was sent to the hon. Gentleman. These decisions took into account the relevant policies in the Essex Structure Plan and the Colchester Borough Local Plan and current guidance set out in Planning Policy Guidance Notes 7 and 8, relating to development in the countryside and the provision of telecommunications facilities.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the adequacy of planning guidance on telecommunications masts in respect of protection afforded to sensitive areas such as areas of outstanding natural beauty. [15348]

Mr. Raynsford: Current planning policy guidance on telecommunications development is set out in planning policy guidance note 8—PPG8 revised. That guidance reflects our general policy of facilitating the growth of new and existing telecommunications systems while protecting the environment. Those objectives include the protection of the countryside and urban areas, especially designated areas such as National Parks, areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty and conservation areas.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many mobile telecommunications masts have been constructed in (a) the Borough of Colchester and (b) Tendring District. [15347]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not collected centrally. However, the Government consider it desirable that the number of telecommunications masts is kept to a minimum. Wherever possible, we would wish to see good use made of existing masts and other structures for the installation of new antennas.

Ancient Woodland

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the percentages of each county covered by ancient woodland in (a) 1986 and (b) 1996 or other available years. [14535]

Angela Eagle: Figures held by English Nature, showing the change in percentage cover of ancient woodland by Count, since 1930, are as follows (figures are not available for 1986):

Air Quality

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to implement the National Air Quality Strategy. [15741]

Mr. Meacher: I am pleased to announce that the Air Quality Regulations 1997 have been laid today. These regulations will set the National Air Quality Strategy objectives in statutory form and initiate the system of local air quality management under Part IV of the Environment Act 1995. I also announced in July that this Government would initiate an immediate review of the National Air Quality Strategy. This review will look at all aspects of the Strategy, including the objectives themselves and the measures required to meet them.

DEFENCE

Military Training and Equipment

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Kenyan Government meet the criteria established to assess the suitability of overseas security forces to receive military training and military equipment from the United Kingdom. [15200]

Dr. Reid: The Kenyan armed forces satisfy the criteria used to determine the suitability of overseas security forces to receive military training from the United Kingdom. Any application for a licence to export defence equipment to Kenya would, as for all countries, be considered on a case-by-case basis and in accordance with the Government's export criteria which were announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, column*65-66*.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the list of those countries qualifying to receive military training and equipment from the United Kingdom is to be reviewed to take account of the Government's ethical foreign policy. [15201]

Dr. Reid: The review of the list of countries qualifying to receive military training will take account of the Government's ethical foreign policy. The list relates solely to military assistance. Applications for the export of defence equipment to all countries are considered in accordance with the Government's export criteria, announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 65-66.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment is made of potential future human rights violations by overseas Governments applying for military training or equipment from the United Kingdom before such applications are granted. [15199]

Dr. Reid: The possibility of the training requested leading to human rights violations is one of the factors taken into account in considering whether such applications should be granted. In the case of conventional arms exports, licence applications are considered taking into account respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in the recipient country. An export licence will not be issued if there is a clearly identifiable risk that the proposed export might be used for internal repression.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on official hospitality for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997. [15266]

Dr. Reid: The request for figures on hospitality expenditure before 1992–93 can be provided only at disproportionate cost. The figures for total expenditure for the years 1992–93 to 30 September 1997 are listed below:

	£ million
(i) 1992–93	4.952
(ii) 1993–94	4.577
(iii) 1994–95	4.867
(iv) 1995–96	4.949
(v) 1996–97	5.327
(vI) 1 May 1997 to 30 September 1997	2.034

These figures reflect expenditure incurred by my Department, the establishments and formations of the Armed Forces at home and abroad, and by individual officers occupying Command and international appointments for which entertainment allowances were payable. Entertainment expenditure for agencies and non-departmental public bodies are included in these figures and are not held separately.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on overseas travel for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997; and if he will provide a breakdown to show (1) air fares and (2) other expenditure relating to overseas travel. [15267]

Dr. Reid: This information is not held centrally and could be provided, if at all, only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

University Students

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students domiciled in England or funded by English education authorities are currently studying for first degrees in Scottish universities. [13870]

Mr. Wilson: The latest year for which published figures are available is 1994–95. In that year, 16,793 English domiciled students were studying for a first degree in a Scottish University or College. Of these, 16,649 were studying full-time and 144 were studying part-time.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with (a) English education authorities, (b) student representative organisations and (c) universities about his proposal to charge students from England attending Scottish universities higher tuition fees than students from Scotland or from other EU countries. [13871]

Mr. Wilson: I invited comments on the Dearing and Garrick reports on 23 July, including comments on Garrick recommendation 29 which covers the issue of tuition fees for comparable qualifications. Since then, responses have been received from student representative organisations, amongst others, and the Committee of Scottish Higher Education Principals, whom I have also met. I have had extensive discussion with Ministerial colleagues in the Department of Education and Employment, and my announcement on Monday 27 October with regard to tuition fees was the agreed position of the Government.

Dounreay Nuclear Plant

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had about the discharge authorisations for the Dounreay nuclear site; with whom the discussions took place; and what the outcome is of such discussions. [14284]

Mr. Chisholm: In the first instance it is for the Scottish Environment Protection Agency to determine the terms of the discharge authorisations for the Dounreay Nuclear site. In March 1997 SEPA consulted the then Secretary of State on the terms of revised discharge authorisations which it proposed to grant. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State subsequently noted that the authorisations which SEPA proposed to make differed significantly from those on which the initial consultation was based. In August he therefore asked SEPA to conduct a further round of consultation based on the authorisations it is minded to grant, to ensure that the widest range of views is obtained. Arrangements to conduct this fresh round of consultation are now well advanced.

My right hon. Friend has not held discussions with other parties about the discharge authorisations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what, at 1 October, was the average waiting time for (a) visas and (b) interviews relating to visa applications in respect of United Kingdom posts at (i) Bombay, (ii) Islamabad, (iii) New Delhi, (iv) Calcutta, (v) Karachi, (vi) Dhaka, (vii) Washington, (viii) New York, (ix) Da-es-Salaam, (x) Nairobi and (xi) Lagos. [14237]

Mr. Fatchett: Entry clearance posts in the Indian sub-continent receive a heavy volume of applications to join families in the United Kingdom. People applying for an indefinite stay, known as "settlement", are divided into separate queues for interview. This allows posts to deal more quickly with those who may have a claim to compassionate treatment.

The information my hon. Friend requested is as follows:

Post	Waiting time for a straight forward visit application	Waiting time if an interview is required for a visit visa	Waiting time for a settlement interview
Bombay	same day	same day	Q1 same day Q2 2 months Q3 2 months Q4 5 months
Islamabad	same day	22 days	Q1 5 months Q2 5 months Q3 6 months Q4 9 months
New Delhi	same day	same day	Q1 same day Q2 2.5 months Q3 3.5 months Q4 4.5 months
Calcutta	same day	5 days	7 days
Karachi	same day	15 days	9 weeks
Dhaka	same day	same day	Q1 3 months Q2 3 months Q3 3 months Q4 9.5 months
Washington	same day	1 day	2 days
New York	same day	4 days	same day
Dar-es-Salaam	same day	2–3 days	2–3 days
Nairobi	same day	6 days	24 days
Lagos	same day	11 days	5 months

The queue groupings are:

Q1—Spouses and children under 18 of British citizens; elderly relatives; (maximum waiting time—3 months).

Q2—Spouses and children of non-British citizens; (maximum waiting time—3 months).

Q3—Fiance(e)s and other first time applicants (maximum waiting time—6 months).

Q4—Re-applicants (maximum waiting time—9 months).

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the open day held by his Department in order to recruit more members of the ethnic minority community to join the Foreign Office. [14229]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We were delighted to welcome more than 900 members of the public to this Department's Open Day on 19 September. Many young people from all over Britain attended; some had travelled form the Orkney Islands. They fully represented the diversity of modern Britain: ethnic minorities; people with disabilities; students from a variety of schools; careers advisers; religious and community leaders. non-governmental organisations and pressure groups representing a broad range of the interests of the people of the UK, at home and overseas, also joined us.

Our purpose in opening up this Department was to show what the Department does.

It is our intention to project this Department as a professional, modern and friendly organisation which works hard to represent the interests of the British people overseas and not the forbidding and stuffy place of popular myth. We hope that young women and men, from all communities and social backgrounds, will consider coming to work with us at this Department, helping us to make it an organisation which is truly representative of all the people of the UK.

The Open Day was a huge success. In September alone there was a 274 per cent. increase in the average monthly recruitment enquiries and this Department's monthly careers briefings are fully booked for months ahead.

We intend to make Open Days a regular feature in this Department's calendar of events.

Middle East Peace Process

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise the Middle Eastern Peace Process with particular reference to resolving the refugee issue, during the United Kingdom Presidency of the European Union. [14474]

Mr. Fatchett: The Palestinian refugee issue is to be resolved in direct final status negotiations between Israelis and palestinians. We recognise the importance of finding a mutually acceptable solution to the issue as part of a just, lasting and comprehensive peace agreement. We are considering what contribution we can make during our Presidency to support efforts to resolve this issue.

Montserrat

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people are currently living in communal shelters in Montserrat; and if he will make a statement. [14998]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As at the morning of 6 November, there were 783 people living in communal shelters.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many new homes are currently being built on the island of Montserrat; and if he will make a statement. [14999]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Contractors employed by the Department for International Development have recently completed 50 new houses at Davy Hill. Work is underway at Lookout on another 50 which should be completed in late December.

Also available to Montserratians are Government funded, self-help financial assistance schemes to build or complete their own properties. These schemes are administered by the Government of Montserrat and numbers of participants are not known, although £342,000 has been provided to date under the materials assistance project.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many migrants from Montserrat are currently in the United Kingdom; how many entered in (i) June, (ii) July, (iii) August and (iv) September; and if he will make a statement. [15001]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Figures are not available in the precise form requested. Under the voluntary evacuation scheme which began in April 1996, a total of 1,049 Montserratians had entered the UK by 3 July 1997; a total of 1,291 had come by 28 July, and by 1 September a total of 1,715 had arrived. Following the introduction of an assisted passage scheme, a further 635 Montserratians arrived in the UK in September. We estimate that there are currently around 3,000 in the UK.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many patients are currently being cared for in the temporary hospital in Montserrat; what are the hospital's sanitation arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [15000]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There are currently five patients in the acute ward and a further 37 elderly persons cared for in the Margetson Memorial Home. A community services unit on the same site accommodates approximately 30 elderly or disabled persons evacuated from their homes.

The sanitation system at the temporary hospital was not designed for such heavy use. As part of an ongoing programme of major works at the hospital, the Department for International Development is spending approximately £150,000 on improvements to sanitation.

Dependent Territories

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the current review of the status of Britain's dependent territories will be completed; and if he will make a statement. [14988]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We hope to complete the review to coincide with the Dependent Territories Association Conference scheduled to take place in London on 4 February of next year.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will be responsible for drawing up the review of Britain's dependent territories; and if Governments of the dependent territories themselves will be invited to make submissions. [14990]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are responsible for drawing up the review, consulting other Ministries and Governments of Dependent Territories. The Government of Gibraltar were already considering proposals for constitutional change before we announced this review. We will therefore be looking at these proposals separately.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members of the current UNISCOM Inspection Team in Iraq are from the United Kingdom; and if he will indicate their qualifications for being part of the UNISCOM team. [14712]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There are currently 11 UK personnel serving with the UN Special Commission in Baghdad. All have been provided in response to specific requests from the Special Commission for people with the skills required in the Special Commission's work—for example, an understanding of biological or chemical weapons technology.

Amsterdam Treaty

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Minister of the Crown signed the treaty of Amsterdam; and if he will list the topics of each declaration made by Her Majesty's Government, or to which they are a party, indicating dates on which these were published, and place of publication. [15058]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I signed the Treaty of Amsterdam on behalf of the Crown. The United Kingdom participated in the 51 Declarations adopted by the Conference and annexed to the Final Act of the Conference. Those Declarations are listed, and reproduced, in a Command Paper—Cm 3780—which was published on 29 October 1997.

European Courts

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 665, if he will list those articles of the signed version of the treaty of Amsterdam, and those of the provisional version (CONF 4001/97) published on 19 June, which will require referral by courts and tribunals of member states of the European Union to the Court of Justice of the European Community in Luxembourg, broken down into those which are (a) part of and (b) not part of the area of freedom, security and justice provided for in the provisional version above. [15034]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Except as set out in (ii) below, no article of the Treaty of Amsterdam requires courts and tribunals of Member States to refer questions to the European Court of Justice.

In the Area of Freedom Security and Justice: (i) Member States are given the option under Title VI of the Treaty on European Union to accept the jurisdiction of the ECJ to give preliminary rulings on measures adopted under this Title. (ii) under Article 73p of the new title IIIa of the EC Treaty (draft Article H in the preliminary version CONF 4001/97), Member States' courts of last instance may in some circumstances be required to refer to the ECJ.

In other areas, there is no modification of the arrangements for preliminary rulings set out in Article 77 of the EC Treaty.

European Court of Justice

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the United Kingdom Government have made on the Swedish Government's failure to nominate Judge Briton Sundberg-Weitman for appointment to the European Court of Justice. [15281]

Mr. Doug Henderson: None.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek a review of the procedure for the appointment of judges to the European Court of Justice to ensure appointments are made on the basis of competence and do not discriminate against women and ethnic minorities. [15282]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No. Appointments to the European Court of Justice are made in accordance with Article 167 of the Treaty establishing the European Community, which states that:

"The Judges and Advocates-General shall be chosen from persons whose independence is beyond doubt and who possess the highest judicial offices in their respective countries or who are jurisconsults of recognized competence; they shall be appointed by common accord of the governments of the Member States for a term of six years."

So far as UK appointments are concerned, our policy is to nominate the best qualified candidate, regardless of ethnic origin, gender, marital status, sexual orientation, political affiliation or, subject to the physical requirements of the office, disability.

Correspondence

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Erith and Thamesmead dated 24 April, 17 June and 23 September; what is his Department's standard for response times to letters from hon. Members; and if he will make a statement. [15624]

Mr. Fatchett: The letters referred to by my hon. Friend were answered on 7 November 1997. As to my Department's response times to letters from hon. Members I would refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) and for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 4 November, Official Report, column 166–67.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each of the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team since 2 May, specifying in each case (a) the participating Minister or Ministers, (b) the destination of the trip, (c) the purpose of the trip and (d) the cost of the trip; and if he will make a statement. TREASURY

European Council

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union held on 5 November. [15430]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I represented the UK at the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 5 November. The Economic Secretary accompanied me.

The Council had only one agenda item to consider, the preparation of the Special Employment Council in Luxembourg later this month. The Council discussed the Commission's draft Employment Guidelines brought forward in response to the Amsterdam European Council's remit.

The Council made progress towards a draft that suited all, and the Presidency has undertaken to draft Conclusions in time for the next ECOFIN on 17 November. There was strong support for the development of Action Plans.

The Council gave broad endorsement to the EIB's plans to assist employment. It also gave a general welcome to the European Parliament's proposed package of EC Budget employment-related spending.

EC (Excessive Deficits)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the maximum amount that can be levied as a fine in accordance with the amended proposal for the excessive deficit procedure laid down in European Union document 9486/97. [12502]

Mrs. Liddell: According to Council Regulation (EC No. 1467/97, of 7 July 1997, the maximum single fine cannot exceed an upper limit of 0.5 per cent. of GDP. Fines would not apply to Member States that do not participate in the single currency.

Government Statistics

Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he intends to take to improve the quality and accuracy of Government statistics. [15082]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government places great importance on the quality and reliability of official statistics to guide and monitor policy and to inform the public about social and economic matters. The Government Statistical Service is constantly looking for ways to improve the quality of the statistics produced, within the constraints of available resources. It is vital that official statistics also command widespread public confidence. Accordingly, we shall be taking forward our manifesto commitment to the creation of an independent National Statistical Service, and an announcement will be made in due course.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the revenue raised from the windfall tax (a) in total and (b) from each of the water and sewerage companies. [15041]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The windfall tax is expected to raise some £5.2 billion in total, of which water and sewerage companies are expected to pay some £1.65 billion. The liability of individual companies is a confidential matter between them and the tax authorities.

Euro Symbol

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors determined the choice of the euro symbol. [13853]

Mrs. Liddell: The euro symbol was designed by the European Commission services. The final choice was made from a number of alternative designs taking into account a survey of the views of the general public.

Local Authority Pension Schemes (Kent)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations she has received on the need to compensate Kent county council and other local authorities in Kent for the cost to local authority pension schemes of the abolition of the payment of tax credits on dividends; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement. [14993]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I have received a number of representations from local authorities about the effects on local authority pension schemes of the removal of tax credits in respect of Advance Corporation Tax. In my replies, I have explained that the extent to which these changes affect local authority budgets will depend on the overall judgments made by the funds' actuaries as they undertake revaluations due, in England, to take effect from 1999–2000. The Government has told the Local Government Association that it will take all factors into account in determining the level of local authority provision for 1999–2000 and subsequent years.

Financial Regulation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss financial regulation; and when he next plans to do so. [14987]

Mrs. Liddell: My right hon. Friend often meets the Governor to discuss a range of different subjects.

Single Currency

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 27 October, Official Report, column 584, what are the main criteria against which Her Majesty's Government will judge whether a single currency is successful enough for the United Kingdom to seek to join. [14318]

Mrs. Liddell: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has set out the five economic tests that define whether there is a clear and unambiguous economic case for Britain to join the single currency.

These tests are: first, whether there can be sustainable convergence between Britain and the economies of a single currency; secondly, whether there is sufficient flexibility to cope with economic change; thirdly, the effect on investment; fourthly, the impact on our financial services, and finally whether it is good for employment.

Household Statistics

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the percentage of families with dependent children which are (a) married couples, (b) cohabiting couples and (c) lone parent by each type. [14453]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Edward Leigh, dated 11 November 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent question about the marital status of adults with dependent children.

This information, taken from the 1996 General Household Survey, is contained in the following table:

Family type and marital status

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the percentage of households headed by a person who is (i) married, (ii) cohabiting, (iii) single, (iv) widowed, (v) divorced, (vi) separated and (vii) cohabiting with someone of the same sex. [14452]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Edward Leigh, dated 11 November 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to your recent question on the marital status of heads of households.

This information, taken from the 1996 General Household Survey, is contained in the following table:

Overseas Investment

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) the latest available date, the totals for United Kingdom private sector overseas investment in (i) the other European Union countries, (ii) North America and (iii) the rest of the world. [14483]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from John Kidgell to Mr. Eric Forth, dated 11 November 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked the Director of the Office for National Statistics to reply to your recent question asking for a breakdown of the United Kingdom's private sector overseas investment. The Director has asked me to respond in his absence.

The figures requested are shown in the attached table. They are based on net flows of outward direct investment i.e. where a United Kingdom company has a significant and lasting interest in an enterprise operating overseas. No information is available centrally regarding the geographical breakdown of portfolio overseas.

Paracetamol (Deaths)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) adults and (b) children have committed suicide using paracetamol in each of the last 10 years. [14279]

Mrs. Helen Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. James Clappison dated 11 November 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to reply to your recent question asking how many adults and children have committed suicide using paracetamol in each of the last 10 years.

The information is given in the following table.

Deaths (a) from suicide and (b) undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted, where paracetamol is mentioned on the death certificate, England and Wales, 1993–1996

(a) Suicide

	Paracetamol without mention of other drugs			Paracetamol with mention of other drugs
	Age			Age
Year	0–14	15–19	20 and over	0–14	15–19	20 and over
1993	— (—)	— (—)	67 (7)	— (—)	7 (—)	162 (35)
1994	— (—)	— (—)	68 (5)	— (—)	3 (1)	141 (19)
1995	— (—)	1 (—)	75 (2)	1 (—)	3 (—)	141 (17)
1996	—(—)	— (—)	54 (6)	— (—)	7 (—)	153 (16)

(b) Undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted

	Paracetamol without mention of other drugs			Paracetamol with mention of other drugs
	Age			Age
Year	0–14	15–19	20 and over	0–14	15–19	20 and over
1993	— (—)	2 (—)	60 (6)	— (—)	3 (—)	65 (19)
1994	1 (—)	— (—)	51 (5)	1 (1)	3 (—)	91 (21)
1995	— (—)	2 (—)	69 (—)	1 (—)	7 (1)	110 (29)
1996	— (—)	3 (—)	51 (3)	— (—)	4 (—)	90 (19)

The figures in brackets are those deaths where there was a mention of alcohol. These figures are included in the non-bracketed figures.

Data prior to 1993 can be obtained from Tables 10 and 11 in Mortality statistics: accidents and violence, series DH4 (1987–89) and Tables 10 and 11 in Mortality statistics; injury and poisoning, series DH4 (1990–92). Copies are available in the House of Commons library.

The inclusion of a substance in the above tables (and in Tables 10 and 11) does not imply that it is necessarily toxic; and, where two or more substances are listed together, the contribution, if any, of each to the death is unknown. Even where one substance is listed alone there may well be other factors with an important bearing on the death.

Since 1993, the ONS has held all deaths information electronically. The data were extracted using a "text search" facility, focusing on paracetamol and a list of paracetamol-containing compounds. Although provision was made to take into account spelling errors in the recording of these compounds, the figures should be seen as estimates because it cannot be guaranteed that every single case has been identified. The ONS is actively exploring, with interested parties, ways to improve these data.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many accidental deaths of (a) adults and (b) children have been caused by paracetamol in each of the last 10 years. [14280]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. James Clappison, dated 11 November 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to reply to your recent question asking how many accidental deaths of adults and children have been caused by paracetamol in each of the last 10 years.

Deaths from accidental poisoning where paracetamol is mentioned on the death certificate, England and Wales, 1993–96

	Paracetamol without mention of other drugs			Paracetamol with mention of other drugs
	Age			Age

1994	2 (—)	2 (–)	36 (10)	1 (—)	4 (1)	49 (15)
1995	— (—)	1 (—)	34 (6)	— (—)	2 (1)	46 (20)
1996	1 (—)	3 (1)	36 (5)	— (—)	6 (1)	43 (11)

The figures in brackets are those deaths where there was a mention of alcohol. These figures are included in the non-bracketed figures.

Data prior to 1993 can be obtained from Tables 10 and 11 in Mortality statistics: accidents and violence, series DH4 (1987–1989) and Tables 10 and 11 in Mortality statistics: injury and poisoning, series DH4 (1990–1992). Copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

The inclusion of a substance in the above table (and in Tables 10 and 11) does not imply that it is necessarily toxic; and, where two or more substances are listed together, the contribution, if any, of each to the death is unknown. Tax Harmonisation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the harmonisation of (a) value added tax and (b) other indirect taxes in the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [13531]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 October 1997]: The Government, while supportive of efforts to simplify and modernise the current European Community VAT system, is opposed to further unnecessary harmonisation of VAT at the Community level. With regard to the other indirect taxes which are the subject of EC-wide legislation (the excise duties on alcohol and alcoholic beverages, tobacco products and mineral oils), the Government believes that Member States should be free to set these excise duty rates at the levels they feel are appropriate to their own particular circumstances, subject only to the agreed minimum rates. Nevertheless, the Government considers that there should be movement towards the approximation of these excise duty rates across the EC and that some steps in the direction of the UK pattern of indirect taxation make sense.

Income Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effects on employment of raising the level of the personal income tax allowance by £1,000 per annum; and if he will make a statement. [14519]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 10 November 1997]: Improving the incentive to work will help increase employment. The Government is currently looking at ways of streamlining and modernising the tax and benefits system to meet the objectives of promoting work incentives, reducing poverty and welfare dependency, and strengthening community and family life. This review includes looking at benefits, tax rates and allowances to find the most effective way to encourage employment and reward work.

Tax Changes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cumulative revenue yield for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–1 and (e) 2001–2 resulting from announced changes to direct and indirect taxation in these years; and if he will make a statement. [13281]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The forecast cumulative revenue yield for 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 for the changes announced in the July 1997 Budget are shown in table 2.2 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report (HC85). Tables 2B.1 and 2B.2 of the same document show the revenue effects of measures announced since the 1996 Budget for these years and of measures announced in 1996 Budget or earlier which take effect after the 1997 Budget. Estimates are not available beyond 1999–2000.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cumulative revenue yield for (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95, (d) 1995–96 and (e) 1996–97 from the changes in direct and indirect taxation announced in the budgets over the period from 1992 to 1996; and if he will make a statement. [13282]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 November 1997]: For each budget the forecast cumulative revenue yield of changes for 1992–93 to 1996–97 are given in the Financial Statement and Budget Reports (March 1992 tables 4.1, 4A.1 (covering 1992–93 and 1993–94), March 1993 tables 4.1, 4B.1, (1993–94 to 1995–96), November 1993 tables 4.1 annex B to chapter 4 first table (1994–95 to 1996–97), November 1994 tables 5.1, 5B.1 (1995–96 to 1997–98), November 1995 tables 5.1, 5B.1, November 1996 Annex A to chapter 6 first table). The outturn revenue yield of the announced budget changes to taxation are not available. However over the period 1992–93 to 1996–97 tax as a share of GDP rose from 34½ per cent. to 36 per cent.

EU Budget

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to use the 1998–99 Contingency Reserve in order to accommodate a higher than expected United Kingdom net contribution to the European Community Budget in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [14521]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 10 November 1997]: Should the UK's net contribution in 1998–99 turn out to be higher than in published public expenditure plans, the additional expenditure would fall to be met from the Reserve. There is, however, no reason to suppose that the estimates made by the previous Government will be insufficient.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date he will be able to publish a revised estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Community Budget for 1998; if he will update the figures for United Kingdom expenditure on the European Communities for 1998–99 as set down in the Financial statement and Budget report 1997–98, page 123, Table 5.A.4; and if he will make a statement. [14520]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 10 November 1997]: An estimate for the UK's net contribution to the 1998 European Community Budget will, as usual, be included in the annual White Paper on the EC Budget. The Government hopes to publish the White Paper on the 1998 Budget in the Spring of next year. A revised Treasury forecast for the UK's net contribution in respect of the financial year 1998–99 will be included in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", and also the "Departmental Report of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's smaller Departments", both of which are expected to be published in March next year.

Green Budget

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the presentation of the Green Budget to Parliament. [15086]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 10 November 1977]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor will make a statement to the House on 25 November (as announced to the hon. Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) on 30 October, Official Report, column 884), when he will also be presenting a Command Paper.

VAT (Energy Saving Materials)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his Department has yet completed its review of the rate of value added tax on energy-efficient materials; and if he will make a statement. [14517]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 10 November 1997]: Customs have completed their review and are now preparing a report for publication.

G7 Central Banks

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the various differences in the arrangements for operational independence by central banks in the conduct of monetary policy among those G-7 countries which have introduced such arrangements, from those applicable under his proposals in the United Kingdom. [14511]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 10 November 1997]: The proposed arrangements by the Chancellor to give the Bank of England statutory operational responsibility over monetary policy are along similar lines to the arrangements in other G-7 countries. Most countries have moved to give central banks greater operational responsibility and to focus monetary policy on price stability. However the arrangements for the UK are a British solution for British needs.

The Monetary Policy Committee of the Bank of England has operational responsibility to achieve a monetary policy target set by the Chancellor. The Chancellor retains the right to override the operational autonomy of the Bank in extreme economic circumstances and if it is in the public interest.

Arrangements for other G-7 countries give varying degrees of independence to the central bank. The most independent is the Bundesbank, which has full independence from the Government and is required neither to consult nor report to Parliament. The Banque de France has recently been reformed to give it full independence over monetary policy decisions and bring its arrangements into line with the proposed arrangements for the ESCB.

In the US, the Federal Reserve has discretion over both the goals and instruments of monetary policy; but it is required to give a full account of its policies to Congress.

The Bank of Japan Law has been revised recently to establish the independence of the Bank of Japan (which comes into effect from April 1, 1998), but is designed to ensure that Government views are heard. The Government retains the right to attend and make proposals to the Policy Board.

The Bank of Canada also has considerable discretion over the goals and instruments of monetary policy. But the Canadian Government has ultimate responsibility for the direction of monetary policy and, in case of disagreements, retains the right to issue a directive to the Bank in respect of monetary policy.

The Banca D'Italia also has considerable autonomy. The Governor sets autonomously the official discount rate, and neither Parliament or the Government can interfere in this process. However the Bank's annual monetary policy objectives must be approved by the Inter-Ministerial Committee for Economic Planning.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the costs of converting to the Euro for (a) Government, (b) retailers, (c) manufacturers, (d) the financial sector, (e) the public and (f) the economy as a whole; and if he will make a statement. [13718]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The cost of converting to the euro would depend on the timing and detailed nature of the transition. The Chancellor has set up a Standing Committee to consider how the United Kingdom would approach the transition to the euro if and when the United Kingdom joins, and he is receiving advice from business sources through a Business Advisory Group looking at the practical implications of economic and monetary union.

The Government believes that, in principle, the United Kingdom should join a successful EMU provided the economic benefits of joining are clear and unambiguous. The Chancellor set out the five tests against which the economic case will be judged. The Treasury's assessment of the five economic tests is available in the Library of the House.

Tourism

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money is set aside in the current European Union budget for tourism (a) under the Leader II programme and (b) under other European programmes; how much of this is targeted at projects in the United Kingdom; what assessment he has made of the cost-effectiveness of the programmes; and if he will make a statement. [12501]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I have been asked to reply. The information is not available in the form requested.

Many Community programmes have an impact on tourism, or tourism has a role to play in them although tourism is not the primary purpose of the programmes. No figures are therefore available which show the total spending which might have relevance to tourism. The Commission has recently produced a report highlighting some of these areas and the Department for Culture, Media and Sport submitted an Explanatory Memorandum to Parliament on 31 July on European Community Document COM(97) 332 FINAL (also numbered 9712/97): Community Measures Affecting Tourism in 1995–96.

The only direct programmes relating to tourism have been the European Year of Tourism 1991 and the Tourism Action Plan of 1993–95, both of which were criticised in European Court of Auditors Special Report No 3/96 (Document 11833/96, also numbered 17859) on tourist policy and the promotion of tourism, on which the European Legislation Committee of the House reported in its Report No 16 session 96/97, and on which there was subsequent correspondence by the Chairman of the Committee and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farmers (Exchange Rate Fluctuations)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to introduce a system of dispensation to reflect exchange rate fluctuations similar to that available to German farmers. [14965]

Mr. Rooker: EU rules make it possible for the UK to compensate farmers for the income effects of revaluations of the rates used to convert subsidies and other amounts fixed under the CAP into sterling. Paying this aid would have significant implications for UK public expenditure. We are keeping the situation under review but, on the evidence currently available, have concluded that the case for payment is at present not proven.

Calves

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many calves have been imported from the continent for slaughter in United Kingdom abattoirs since 1 July; from which countries they have been imported; and if he will make a statement. [14908]

Mr. Rooker: Information taken from the Animal Movement (ANIMO) electronic data system indicates that no bovine animals were imported into the United Kingdom from the continent for slaughter between July and September 1997 inclusive.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to bring into force the new arrangements whereby the veterinary surgeons responsible for inspecting live animals prior to export will be appointed and paid by him; and if he will make a statement. [13913]

Mr. Morley: Preliminary discussions have been held with the British Veterinary Association and the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons about the arrangements for the appointment and payment of local veterinary inspectors by this Department. Following consideration of points raised by the BVA and the RCVS, formal proposals will be drawn up including a date for implementing the new arrangements.

Sheep Annual Payment Scheme

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his Department's estimate for expenditure on the sheep annual payment scheme for 1997–98; [15461]

(2) what was his Department's forecast of expenditure on sheep annual payment for the financial year 1997–98. [15460]

Mr. Morley: I am replying in my right hon. Friend's absence as he is on official business in South Africa.

The Department's published estimate provision for 1997–98 included £175 million for the sheep annual premium scheme, which is entirely funded by reimbursements from the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund. The estimate has not changed.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make representations to the Treasury, in respect of his Department's underspend on current payments of sheep annual payment, to use the surplus to maintain 1997 levels of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments; and if he will make a statement. [15459]

Mr. Morley: I am replying in my right hon. Friend's absence as he is on official business in South Africa.

The Sheep Annual Premium Scheme is fully funded by the European Union. To the extent that actual expenditure falls short of the published estimates, the shortfall is offset by a corresponding loss of receipts from the European Agriculture Guidance and Guarantee Fund. As such, no spare funds result which could be directed towards the payment of Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's public expenditure ceiling for 1997–98. [15462]

Mr. Morley: I am replying in my right hon. Friend's absence as he is on official business in South Africa.

The published Estimate Provision for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for 1997–98, net of EAGGF reimbursement if £765 million.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department's maintenance of 1997 levels of Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance rates of payment for 1998 will breach his overall PES limit for 1997–98. [15463]

Mr. Morley: I am replying in my right hon. Friend's absence as he is on official business in South Africa.

The rates of payment for Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances in 1997 included a one off increase to help farmers cope with the immediate effects of the BSE crisis. PES provision for 1997–98 does not provide for this increase to be sustained in 1998.

Beef

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish for each month, for (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997 to date the levels of domestic beef consumption. [15458]

Mr. Morley: I am replying in my right hon. Friend's absence as he is on official business in South Africa.

Available monthly information on the consumption of beef in the home is given in the table.

This information is from the National Food Survey. The monthly estimates shown contain a greater level of sampling error than the quarterly results normally published for this survey. Therefore a degree of caution is needed when comparing individual month on month changes.

Fisheries (Minimum Landing Sizes)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by species (a) the minimum landing size in force prior to the recent Fisheries Council meeting and (b) the proposed new minimum landing sizes. [15346]

Mr. Morley: I have arranged for the material requested to be placed in the Library of the House.

Fisheries (Discards)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the rules in respect of discarding prior to the Fisheries Council meeting on 30 October; what rules will apply to discards in future; and if he will make a statement on the changes involved. [15345]

Mr. Morley: The present EC technical conservation regulation requires sorting of fish to be carried out immediately after nets have been hauled. The Regulation requires protected species (defined in the Regulation) in excess of catch composition percentages laid down, to be discarded immediately into the sea. Other provisions require undersized fish, shellfish and crustaceans to be discarded immediately.

The new EC Regulation agreed at the Fisheries Council on 30 October to come into effect on 1 January 2000 alters these rules so that:

- for all vessels at all times the percentage of target species retained on board must be at least half that required by the Regulation;
- in addition, for those vessels required to complete logbooks, after the first 24 hours of a trip the catch composition percentages must be correct at time of the daily completion of the logbooks;
- in all cases, the catch composition percentages must be correct at time of return to port.

As in the present regulation, undersized specimens must be discarded immediately.

These changes are to reduce the quantity of fish discarded.

WALES

Telecommunications

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what current plans there are to introduce new telecommunications infrastructure, with particular reference to the provision of fibre optics, into the whole of Wales; and if he will make a statement. [14550]

Mr. Hain: Infrastructure investment is a matter for telecommunication companies. Nevertheless Welsh Office officials regularly meet telecommunication infrastructure providers to encourage the expansion and upgrading of the network throughout Wales. Support is also given to initiatives being driven forward by local authorities and development agencies which aim to improve the telecommunications infrastructure.

Education

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by constituency the (a) number and (b) percentages of 16 to 18-year-olds in full-time education ranked by descending percentage. [14828]

Mr. Hain: In the academic year 1995–96, 59,026 16 to 18-year-olds—58 per cent of the age group—participated in full-time education. No comprehensive central record of students' home addresses is maintained so figures by constituency are not available.

Gwent Levels Wetland Reserve

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make an announcement about (a) the proposed Gwent Levels Wetland Reserve and (b) the proposed compulsory purchase orders; and what assessment he has made of alternative approaches to the proposed Gwent Levels Wetland Reserve. [14959]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The report of the Inspector on the public inquiry into the appeals and applications by the Land Authority for Wales is currently under consideration by my right hon. Friend. The inquiry dealt with a number of complex issues and a decision will be issued as soon as possible. It would not be appropriate at this stage to comment on matters related to those appeals and applications.

Offset Exhibition

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance the Welsh Office gave to the organisers of the Offset exhibition at the North Wales Centre, Aberconwy; and what was the cost to public funds. [15299]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Office did not provide any assistance to the organisers of the Offset UK97 conference held at Llandudno last month. The Welsh Development Agency, however, did provide support to bring the event to Wales. The detail of that support is an operational matter for the Agency and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend direct.

General Practitioners

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sole practitioner GPs there are in (a) Wales as a whole and (b) each health authority area. [15286]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information is given in the following table:

Single-handed general medical practitioners as at 1 April 1997

	Number
North Wales	31
Dyfed Powys	11
Morgannwg	19
Bro Taf	28
Gwent	36
Wales	125

Military Exports

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what discussions he has had with the Welsh Office Exports Promotion Department about the Government's policy on the sale and supply of military, security and police equipment to oppressive regimes; and if he will place the minutes of the meeting in the Library; [15296]

(2) what (a) instructions and (b) policy guidelines he has issued to the Welsh Office Exports Promotion Department about the Government's policy on the sale and supply of military, security and police equipment to oppressive regimes; and if he will place a copy of such guidelines and instructions in the Library. [15297]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave her on 27 June which sets out the Government's position on these matters—Official Report, column 648.

NHS Funding

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the additional funding for the NHS in the coming year will be allocated to Wales. [15287]

Mr. Win Griffiths: In my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget Statement on 2 July, Official Report, column 315, he announced an additional £1.2 billion for the NHS in 1998–99 of which an additional £60.2 million will be allocated to Wales.

Higher Education

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to increase his 1997–98 allocation of funds to higher education. [13774]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 3 November 1997]: I was pleased to announce on 5 November that in 1998–99 an additional £10 million will be available for higher education in Wales. This new investment will match proportionately the package announced for England recently by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

Social Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list for each social services department his estimate of the additional funding which will be made available this winter; [14590]

(2) if he will list by health authority the dates on which the social services departments within each health authority were invited to make applications for additional funding to assist with managing pressures over this winter, indicating the deadlines they were given for completing their funding applications. [14595]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I have recently announced an additional £9.548 million for health authorities this year to alleviate to pressures on emergency admissions. Health authorities will submit their action plans to my officials at the end of November. It will be for health authorities to consider whether, as part of their plans, additional funding will be provided to social services departments.

In July, I also announced £2.5 million to promote primary and community health care in Wales. Within that, health authorities may apply for a share of £250,000 set aside for joint ventures with private nursing homes to provide care this winter for those who do not require the full range of hospital services or who are awaiting the completion of packages of care before discharge.

Roads

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list total Government spending on the (a) M4, (b) A55, (c) A470 and (d) A487 in current real value prices, for (i) each year since 1970 and (ii) in total. [14688]

Mr. Hain: The information on expenditure is not held centrally for each individual road in the Welsh trunk road network as much of the work on these roads is carried out by local authorities acting as trunk road agents for the Welsh Office.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list total Government spending planned for each of the next five financial years and the current financial year on the (a) M4, (b) A55, (c) A470 and (d) A487 expressed in current real value, indicating the cumulative total planned. [14687]

Mr. Hain: Spending plans for the current financial year are detailed in the 1997 Welsh Office Departmental Report, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Plans for the next and subsequent financial years will be published following the outcome of the relevant Public Expenditure Survey deliberations.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on official hospitality for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997. [15270]

Mr. Ron Davies: The information requested is as follows:

	Welsh Office £	Agency (CADW) £
1991–92	36,463 (figures include CADW)	—
1992–93	38,000 (figures include CADW)	—

1996–97	21,033	478
1997–98[1]	6,524	16

[1] 1 May to 30 September 1997.

Expenditure on hospitality by non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department is a matter for the management of these bodies; details are not held centrally. Figures for 1980–81, 1987, 1988 and 1990–91 are not available.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each of the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team since 2 May, specifying in each case (a) the participating Minister of Ministers, (b) the destination of the trip, (c) the purpose of the trip and (d) the cost of the trip; and if he will make a statement. [15272]

Mr. Ron Davies: Since being elected to Office, I have undertaken one overseas trip. Between 11 and 18 October I visited Japan and Korea to promote inward investment. The Welsh Development Agency, who funded the trip, estimate that the costs for myself and my Private Secretary amounted to some £21,676. There have been no other ministerial trips overseas.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on overseas travel for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997; and if he will provide a breakdown to show (1) air fares and (2) other expenditure relating to overseas travel. [15271]

Mr. Ron Davies: Records are not held separately for expenditure on overseas travel by my Department or its agency, and are not held centrally for NDPBs.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (v) the 1997–98 year to date, (vi) the 1997–98 full year estimate and (vii) the 1998–99 planned expenditure. [15273]

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Denominational Schools

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what effect the Government's proposals in the Education White Paper will have on the composition of the governing bodies of denominational schools when they change from grant-maintained status to foundation or aided schools. [14967]

Mr. Byers: The consultation document, "Framework for the Organisation of Schools", set out in detail our proposals for the composition of foundation and aided school governing bodies under the new schools framework.

Our consultation was genuine. We listened carefully to the views expressed and have agreed to make some amendments to the proposed composition of aided school governing bodies to accommodate a majority of two foundation governors at primary schools and three at larger secondary schools. This will apply to denominational grant-maintained schools which choose to become aided. As set out in the Technical Consultation Paper, denominational grant-maintained schools which choose to become foundation will still have a significant number of foundation governors, but not a foundation majority. I am pleased to say that this overall approach has been welcomed by the churches.

Staffordshire Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of the Staffordshire TEC budget was spent on (a) management training for small firms and (b) business start-up training in each of the last five years. [15352]

Dr. Howells: It is not possible to respond to this question as "management training for small firms" is not identified as a separate TEC budget line by either DfEE or DTI.

The situation with regard to Business start-up training is given below (only the last four years detailed records are readily accessible).

Contract year	TEC budget[1] (£million)	Business start-up budget[2] £	Business start-up budget as a percentage of TEC budget
1994–95	26.3	800,555	3
1995–96	26.0	159,124	0.6
1996–97	28.3	400,000	1.4
1997–98	24.5	557,348	2.3

[1] TEC budget 1994–95 and 1995–96 comprises of DfEE funds only. TEC Budget 1996–97 and 1997–98 comprises of DfEE funds and DTI Business Support funds (including ERDF co-financing).
[2] Business start-up budget 1994–95 and 1995–96 comprises of DfEE funds only.
Business start-up budget 1996–97 comprises of £350,000 from the Single Regeneration Budget and £50,000 from Staffordshire TEC Reserves.
Business start-up budget 1997–98 comprises of £289,000 from the Single Regeneration Budget, £131,000 from Staffordshire TEC Reserves and £137,348 for Enterprise Rehearsal within the DfEE funding stream for Training for Work.

Student Loans

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to extend eligibility for Access Fund payments to part-time students in higher education from 1998–99; and what estimate he has made of the cost. [14434]

Dr. Howells: We have already indicated that part-time students will become eligible for consideration for payment from the higher education Access Funds from the beginning of the academic year 1998–99. Our guidance to the Funding Council will be amended to reflect this. We have also announced that the total amount available to the higher education Access Funds will be doubled.

Spending from the Access Funds is not demand led in the sense that if more students are eligible to apply, more money will need to be paid out. A fixed sum is allocated for the academic year and distributed amongst higher education institutions, who decide individual payments on the basis of the evidence of financial difficulties presented by students applying. Doubling the amount available is intended to improve the position of both part-time and full-time students.

GCSE Results (New Towns)

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by gender the number and percentage of 15-year-olds living in the 21 English new towns who achieved at least five grade A GCSE passes in the 1996–97 school year.[14394]

Dr. Howells: The GCSE results of pupils are collected by Local Education Authority area in which the school is located not by where a pupil lives. Information is not available by new towns, however, the latest data available by LEA are shown in the following table.

Higher Education

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what studies his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the unit costs of comparable education programmes provided by (i) training and enterprise councils and (ii) colleges. [13113]

Dr. Howells: The Department published "The Public Funding Cost of Education and Training for 16–19 year olds in England in 1995–96" in March this year. This covers the cost of successfully achieving 3 A levels and advanced GNVQs in colleges and NVQ3s in work-based training. The analysis is carried out by the Department in consultation with external partners.

Welfare to Work (West Midlands)

Ms Jennifer Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements have been made to involve the voluntary sector in the Welfare to Work programme in the west midlands. [14265]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Ms Jennifer Jones, dated 11 November 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the arrangements that have been made to involve the voluntary sector in the Welfare to Work programme in the West Midlands. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

A great deal of activity has been undertaken, both at a regional level and locally, to ensure that voluntary sector organisations in the West Midlands are fully involved with the development of New Deal and the plans to implement it. In particular, over 100 representatives from 73 voluntary organisations attended a series of regional consultation events over the summer. They represented a range of voluntary sectors including women's groups; those with concern for issues of crime, race, homelessness, age; more general volunteer bureaux; and those representing local churches.

In more recent months the Employment Service Regional Director, Scott McIntyre, has personally met a number of voluntary organisations including the Princes Trust, Birmingham Voluntary Sector Council, Groundwork Trust, Business in the Community, Rathbone Community Industry, West Midlands Low Pay Unit, Foyer for Birmingham, the Irish Community Forum, British Trust for conservation Volunteers and is due to meet shortly the Young Offender Consortium.

Employment Service District Managers in the region have also been working with voluntary sector networks, through District events and meetings. For instance, in the Black Country Pathfinder area 89 organisations attended two District Voluntary Sector conferences from the full range of voluntary organisations in the area.

In the same Pathfinder area Dudley Council for Voluntary Services, Sandwell Council of Voluntary Organisations, Wolverhampton Voluntary Sector Council and Walsall Voluntary Sector Council are all involved in a Joint Venture Partnership to take forward the Voluntary sector option in the Pathfinder.

A similar level of activity can be found throughout the rest of the region and is set to continue as New Deal is developed further over the next few months. Assessment panels which are taking place over the next few weeks will consider in detail the plans for each New Deal partnership in the region. Three members of these panels, Allison Millward (Groundwork Trust and a member of the National Task Force), Ian Morrison (Birmingham Voluntary Services Council) and Sue Nicholls (Hereford and Worcester Community Council) will be from the voluntary sector.

I hope this is helpful.

Social Affairs Council

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Social Affairs Council on 6 November. [15841]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I represented the UK at the Social Affairs Council on 6 November.

This supplementary meeting was convened solely for the purpose of making preparations for the Extraordinary European Council on Employment taking place in Luxembourg on 20–21 November.

The meeting discussed the Commission's draft communication concerning the preparation of draft Guidelines on Employment which were called for by the Amsterdam European Council in June. I expressed the UK's broad satisfaction with the overall structure and key themes of the Guidelines and welcomed growing recognition that EU wide numerical targets on employment and unemployment were inappropriate. There was agreement among Member States and the Presidency on the need for the Guidelines primarily to express consensus on the areas in which Member States should take action to tackle unemployment and promote employability and that Member States should draw up Action Plans as the basis for national implementation of the Guidelines. The UK has a number of detailed comments which it will be discussing with the Presidency and other Member States. There will be further discussion at a joint meeting of the Social Affairs Council and the Economic and Finance Council of Ministers on 17–18 November.

School (Exclusions)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his current estimate of the number of children excluded from (a) primary and (b) secondary schools. [15059]

Ms Estelle Morris: In the 1995–96 school year, 1,608 pupils were permanently excluded from primary schools and 10,344 were permanently excluded from secondary schools.

Figures for the 1996–97 school year will be collected as part of the annual Schools Census in January 1998.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the number of trainees that are likely to qualify for modern apprenticeship this year; and what is his estimate of the trend for the next three years. [13900]

Dr. Howells: The number of people joining Modern Apprenticeships in 1997–98 is planned to be about 62,500.

All Government-funded programmes are currently being reviewed as part of the Departmental Spending Review. Plans for 1998–99 and later years will be announced in due course.

Careers Advice (Wolverhampton)

Ms Jennifer Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the monitoring arrangements and criteria to be used by the Government Office of the west midlands when evaluating the performance of the private Careers Advice Service (PROSPECTS) operating in Wolverhampton. [14263]

Dr. Howells: All Careers Service companies must submit a plan to their local Government Office which contracts with careers service companies on a basis which is designed to ensure that necessary outcomes are achieved and the requirements of the DfEE are met. These requirements are set out in the document "The Requirements and Guidance for Careers Service Providers". This requires Careers Services to evaluate systematically their delivery of all contracted outcomes, operate an effective system for collecting customer feedback, and undertake a thorough annual review of their activities.

The Government Office monitors Careers Service companies' performance against the key indicators set down in this document against the companies' business plans and against the terms of the contract. Regular monitoring of the financial position of Careers Service companies is also routinely undertaken.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the balances held by each grant-maintained school in the London Borough of Brent. [15464]

Mr. Byers: The monitoring of financial information provided by individual grant-maintained schools, including information on balances, is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have therefore written to Sir Anthony Tippet, Chairman of the Funding Agency, to ask him to provide the figures requested.

Child Care

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he is taking to implement a child care strategy; and what is the timetable for that strategy. [14570]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have already taken action to improve child care by extending the child care disregard and offering young people the opportunity to obtain training and work experience in child care as part of the New Deal programme. We are currently developing a National Child care Strategy which will help parents, especially women, to balance family and working life and I will make an announcement in the first part of next year.

Hackney Borough Council

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he plans to approve the proposals contained in the report of the Improvement Team which he sent into Hackney Council; [15378]

(2) if he plans to reject any of the proposals contained in the report of the Improvement Team which he sent into Hackney Council; [15379]

(3) what assessment he has made of the criticisms made by the chief executive of Hackney Council of the proposals contained in the report of the Improvement Team which he sent into Hackney; and what plans he has for further work by the Improvement Team. [15380]

Mr. Byers: The Improvement Team appointed to advise Hackney Local Education Authority have delivered a report on the "Management and Leadership of the Hackney LEA" to the Chief Executive of the Borough. I am pleased that Hackney Council's Education and Leisure Services Committee have agreed to the appointment of a Director of Education on the salary recommended by the Improvement Team to provide leadership of the education service. The Improvement Team is continuing with its work and will submit an interim report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in January 1998.

[15259]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is available only at disproportionate cost.

Official Hospitality

[15258]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is available only at disproportionate cost.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (v) the 1997–98, year to date, (vi) the 1997–98, full year estimate and (vii) the 1998–99 planned expenditure. [15261]

Dr. Howells: Before the merger in July 1995, the Department operated separately funded programmes of publicity. This continued until the end of the financial year 1995–96.

Information on the publicity and advertising spend of agencies and non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally by the Department

The costs of the total expenditure on publicity and on advertising for the former Departments are as follows:

Department for Education

1993–94: £10.1 million

1994–95: £9.4 million

1995–96: £5.4 million

Department of Employment

1993–94: £11.1 million

1994–95: £11.1 million

1995–96: £11.0 million

The costs of the total expenditure on publicity and advertising for the present Department are as follows:

Department for Education and Employment

1996–97: £17.4 million (provisional)

1997–98: £4.0 million (to date)

1997–98: £12.6 million (current budget, but £13.2 million subject to the passage of the Winter Supplementary Estimate).

The projected expenditure on publicity and advertising in 1998–99 for the Department is £13.1 million.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Government have to review the all work test for incapacity. [15354]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 27 October, Official Report, column 731.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals against incapacity benefit disallowance were (a) received and (b) heard in the year ending March 1997; and what was the success rate for applicants. [15353]

Mr. Denham: The information is in the table.

One of the Government's first priorities for Social Security is to modernise both the appeals system and the decision making process. We intend to introduce measures to streamline and simplify the system to make it easier to understand and more cost effective.

Period	Number of incapacity benefit appeals against disallowance received	Number of appeals heard	Percentage of appeals heard and decided in the claimant's favour
April 1996 to March 1997	100,703	59,567	44 per cent.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will place in the Library the correspondence sent by her Department to the Advertising Standards Authority disputing their draft recommendation on the compliant made by Ms Liz Lynne, about the national press advertisement for the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [14809]

Mr. Denham: The information, with a copy of the final adjudication, has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list each of the overseas trips made by herself and other members of her ministerial team since 2 May, specifying in each case (a) the participating Minister or Ministers, (b) the destination of the trip, (c) the purpose of the trip and (d) the cost of the trip; and if she will make a statement. [15224]

8 October	Keith Bradley	Bonn		£1,418
12–14 October	Joan Ruddock	Venice	To attend a conference on "women in decision-making".	£1,693

1. The figures have been rounded to nearest pound.
2. The figures include all related costs incurred by the Minister's party, which on each occasion included the Minister's Private Secretary and one other official.

Mortgage Payments

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will review the practice whereby Benefits Agency adjudication officers cannot approve new mortgages for disabled persons until mortgage funds are advanced in circumstances where building societies are refusing to advance mortgages without confirmation of income support funds. [14621]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Modernising the social security system is a key priority of the Government. The administration of Income Support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Crispin Blunt, dated 10 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if she will review the practice whereby Benefits Agency (BA) adjudication officers (AOs) cannot approve new mortgages for disabled persons until mortgage funds are advanced in circumstances where building societies are refusing to advance mortgages without confirmation of Income Support (IS) funds.

Decisions on individual entitlement to Social Security benefits are made by independent adjudication authorities. In order to make a decision an AO needs to consider the actual facts of the case. It is not possible to give a decision based on hypothetical circumstances. BA staff can however give advice on the rules that will be applied if a mortgage is taken out.

The current arrangements generally work well by giving customers a good indication of the help they may received if their circumstances change, while protecting the right of the AO to make a decision on the facts as they change. There are no plans therefore to review this practice.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Dome

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) if he will provide details of the estimated total fees payable to (a) the Richard Rogers Partnership and (b) M and C Saatchi in relation to the millennium dome project; [12999]

(2) what is the estimated quantum of financial payment due to Kock Hightec by or on behalf of New Millennium Experience Company in relation to the millennium dome exhibition; [12995]

(3) if he will list the terms and conditions of contract between the New Millennium Experience Company and Koch Hightec regarding (a) termination and (b) breach of contract. [12996]

Mr. Mandelson: The information sought is commercial in confidence and falls within that category of exemptions provided for in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (which applies equally to the Government's non-departmental public bodies and agencies). I consider that disclosure could harm the competitive position of the companies concerned and could be disadvantageous to the New Millennium Experience Company in any future competitions for contracts where the equipment, goods or services sought might be similar, in any way, to those covered by the contracts referred to.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Minister without Portfolio on whose behalf he holds the single share in New Millennium Experience Company. [12994]

Mr. Mandelson: I hold the sole share of the New Millennium Experience Company Ltd. on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) when the New Millennium Experience Company will publish its next set of accounts; [13001]

(2) when the New Millennium Experience Company will place interim company accounts in the Library. [13002]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC), then named Millennium Central Limited, became operative on 12 February 1997 when its first Board meeting was held. On the same date the shares of the company were transferred to the then Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and the company became subject to the normal controls applied by the Government to non-departmental public bodies (NDPB). The NMEC is required to produce its first Accounts and Annual Report for the period 12 February 1997 to 31 March 1998 and to submit them to the Shareholder by 30 September 1998. In line with policy applying to all NDPBs, the NMEC's Accounts and Annual Report will be published and copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) if he will set out the tendering procedures which applied to the appointment of Birdair as contractors for the millennium dome project; [12997]

(2) if he will set out the tendering procedures which applied to the appointment of M and C Saatchi as contractors for the millennium dome project. [13000]

Mr. Mandelson: The procedures applied to the Birdair and to the M & C Saatchi contracts were those which the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is required to adopt for the procurement of all contracts for equipment, goods or services and which apply to all non-departmental public bodies. The NMEC must seek to obtain the best value for money, and must award contracts on a competitive basis unless it can show in a particular case that it can achieve better value for money by not doing so, or there are other compelling reasons for not doing so. The NMEC must also comply with European Community Directives governing tendering and contractual procedures and with any additional guidance that the Shareholder, or the Millennium Commission under the terms of its grant, may issue.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts

12. Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria govern the qualifications and experience required for membership fo NHS trusts. [13820]

Mr. Milburn: The Government's new criteria are designed to make boards more representative of the communities they serve and to encourage more National Health Service users and carers to become board members. Candidates should live in the area served by the trust, and demonstrate a commitment to the NHS and to the local community.

19. Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in respect of which projects the extra money made available for the NHS in the 1997 Budget has been allocated. [13828]

Mr. Milburn: The additional resources will be used to help hospitals cope with emergencies, reduce delays in discharge, support primary, community and social care services to keep people out of hospital where possible and begin to restrain the growth in waiting lists. The resources represent an investment for the long term in making the whole health and social services system work better in the future.

26. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the regional distribution of the extra funding which he is providing for the NHS over the winter period. [13835]

Mr. Milburn: Distribution to the eight regional offices has been made on a basis pro-rata to the allocations that their health authorities received for 1997–98. This has given fair regional shares within which the resources can be targeted quickly at areas with greatest need.

29. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for removing the market forces factor from NHS financial allocations. [13838]

Mr. Milburn: We acknowledge that there are concerns in the National Health Service over the way the current market forces factor (MFF) operates.

We have asked the new Advisory Committee on Resource Allocation to undertaken a full review of the staff MFF.

For 1998–99 the staff MFF component of the weighted capitation formula has been modified.

GP Commissioning Guidance

21. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on GP commissioning guidance for 1998–99. [13830]

Mr. Milburn: In early September, we published guidance on the new approach to commissioning for 1998–99. This marked the transition from divisive, bureaucratic contracting out to a new co-operative approach. This will pave the way for a White Paper which will replace the internal market with a framework for quality and fairness.

NHS (East Surrey)

22. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on NHS provision in East Surrey. [13831]

Mr. Milburn: The provision of NHS services in East Surrey is a matter for East Surrey Health Authority to determine. They do this by working with local general practitioners, NHS trusts, other agencies and local people to ensure that national policies are implemented in a way which is sensitive to local needs.

Barnsley Hospital

23. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the proposed private finance initiative refurbishment of catering facilities at Barnsley District General Hospital. [13832]

Mr. Milburn: The Outline Business Case to refurbish catering facilities at Barnsley District General Hospital was approved on 13 October. The Trust is now seeking to attract private sector capital for this scheme under the Private Finance Initiative and will advertise in the Official Journal of the European Communities within the next month.

Dental Services

24. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has received to his investing in dentistry initiative; and when he will allocate the funding earmarked for the programme. [13833]

Mr. Milburn: Since the extra £9 million under the Investing in Dentistry initiative was announced in September, we have received eleven requests for funding from health authorities. Funds are being allocated as decisions are made on each proposal submitted.

34. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the Shropshire health authority regarding NHS dentistry in South Shropshire. [13843]

Mr. Milburn: None.

NHS Bureaucracy

25. Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to transfer money from NHS bureaucracy into patient care. [13834]

28. Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his priorities for reducing bureaucracy in the NHS. [13837]

Mr. Milburn: On 22 May, we announced a programme of measures to reduce management costs by £100 million this year. We will shortly announce further target reductions for 1998–99.

As part of our plans to replace the internal market, we are looking at the scope for further management costs saving.

Local Health Strategies

27. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to promote local health strategies in respect of public health. [13836]

Ms Jowell: Our forthcoming Green Paper, Our Healthier Nation, will emphasise the need for action at all levels—individual, local, and Government—to bring about improvements in health. Local level is where national policies are translated into practice. Joint working will be crucial to help us achieve the goals for improving health.

NHS Surgeons

30. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals he has to identify incompetence among NHS surgeons. [13839]

Mr. Milburn: The law bringing into force the General Medical Council's professional performance procedures, which affect all doctors, was implemented on 1 July 1997 and we will shortly be issuing guidance to the National Health Service on its role in these procedures.

In addition, the Chief Medical Officer has written to all Chief Executives and Medical Directors of NHS trusts asking them to ensure that they have effective procedures in place for doctors to report their concerns about the conduct, performance or health of medical colleagues. This builds on the General Medical Council's guidance in Duties of a Doctor which requires all doctors to:

"act quickly to prevent patients from risk if you have good reason to believe you or a colleague may not be fit for practise".

The effectiveness of these new procedures will be kept under review.

Tobacco Advertising

31. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the White Paper on the intended banning of tobacco advertising. [13840]

Ms Jowell: The White Paper on tobacco control, which will include plans to ban tobacco advertising, will be published next year.

Waiting Lists

32. Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions he plans to take to reduce waiting lists in Winchester and Eastleigh in the next 12 months. [13841]

Mr. Milburn: We expect health authorities and trusts to work together to reverse the trend in runaway growth in waiting lists and times that we inherited from the previous Government. This will take time but the extra £269 million we have re-assigned for the National Health Service in England for 1997-98, the extra £1 billion for next year announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in July and the further cuts in NHS bureaucracy to be announced shortly will help.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the pattern of waiting lists throughout the United Kingdom, indicating the top three regions and specialties where the lists are greatest.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to meet his targets to reduce NHS waiting lists. [13812]

Mr. Milburn: In England we inherited runaway growth in waiting lists from our predecessors. The £269 million we have re-directed to the National Health Service in England for 1997-98 and the extra £1 billion for next year announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in July will help health authorities and trusts to begin to restrain that growth. The latest available information about waiting lists in individual regions and specialties is contained in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England (Resident Based) Quarter ended 30 June 1997", copies of which are available in the Library. Questions relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, respectively.

Trust Mergers

33. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given to health authorities on mergers of trusts. [13842]

Mr. Milburn: Mergers between National Health Service trusts are a matter for local consideration. Each proposal will be considered on its individual merits, taking into account the views of local people and staff.

I announced on 22 September that, if they are to proceed, trust mergers must show demonstrable improvements in patients services and will be expected to deliver a minimum of £½ million savings in bureaucracy within the first two years.

Smoking

35. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost to the NHS of smoking. [13844]

Ms Jowell: Based on 1992 figures, the Health Education Authority's report "The Smoking Epidemic—A Prescription for Change", estimated that the annual cost to the National Health Service of treating smoking-related diseases is £610 million. However, we understand that the Health Education Authority intend to publish more up-to-date figures shortly.

Bedblocking

36. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his proposals to tackle problems associated with bedblocking. [13845]

Mr. Boateng: There is nothing new about problems around hospital discharge and "bedblocking" and it is crucial that hospitals and social services departments work together to ensure that integrated and sensitive hospital discharge arrangements are in place for people with longer-term care needs. We recognise that much hard work has already gone into improving joint working in this area, but believe that there are still improvements that can be made in most places. As one part of the concerted effort my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has asked the National Health Service, social services and housing departments to tackle the pressures on health and local authority services which we expect as winter approaches, we expect hospital discharge arrangements to deliver an effective and timely outcome for patients, particularly for those who need community care support.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has written to Chairmen of health authorities, NHS trusts and leaders of councils outlining our plans for the extra £269 million funding for the NHS in England which was announced on 14 October. The new money is a key step in the Government's strategy to provide better care for older people for improving collaborative working between health and social care services and by tackling winter pressures in the NHS. One of our three priorities for the new money is the provision of more rehabilitation and recuperation services, home care and extra places in care homes to reduce delays in discharging patients from hospital.

In addition to tackling difficult and sort-term problems we are determined in the medium and longer-term to ensure that such problems do not constantly occur and to help all concerned to improve their work across the boundary between health and social care. We will also be issuing revised guidance on hospital discharge procedures.

NHS Staff Safety

37. Mr. Darvill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to improve levels of safety for NHS staff. [13846]

Mr. Milburn: The Government place a very high priority on the safety of National Health Service staff. The NHS Chief Executive has written to health authority and NHS trust chief executives asking them to place issues of health and safety at the top of their agendas; the NHS Executive has also sponsored a series of Health and Safety roadshows for NHS senior management. We will be encouraging and promoting the formation of networks for the exchange of good practice in this area.

The Government have issued guidance to the NHS on ways to cut down on attacks on staff in accident and emergency departments. Also, the Health and Safety Commission will publish "Violence to Staff in Health Services: Guidance on Assessment and Management" before the end of the year, covering all parts of the NHS. The forthcoming NHS Charter will stress patients' responsibilities as well as rights, including the responsibility not to assault NHS staff. Those who assault staff should be appropriately punished.

Racism

38. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to tackle racism in the NHS. [13847]

Mr. Milburn: We announced a programme of concrete measures to tackle inequality, discrimination and racism in the National Health Service in recent speeches made to Unison on 7 October and to NHS leaders at the launch of the Commission for Racial Equality's "Leadership Challenge" in the NHS on 21 October. We have also put extra funding of £200,000 into specific activities to combat racism.

Welfare-to-work Scheme

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he has set out regarding the participation of health authorities and trusts in the Government's welfare-to-work scheme. [13825]

Mr. Milburn: We are currently consulting with the Department of Education and Employment to consider the most effective way in which the National Health Service can play a useful role in providing employment opportunities for the unemployed. As the largest employer in Europe, we expect the NHS to play a significant role in the Welfare-to-Work initiative.

Cold-related Illnesses

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what have been the excess winter treatment rates for cold-related illnesses in hospitals in (a) Lancashire, (b) Cornwall, (c) Tyneside and (d) Suffolk for (i) in-patients and (ii) out-patients for each of the last 10 years; [14260]

(2) how many people in (a) Lancashire, (b) Cornwall, (c) Tyneside and (d) Suffolk received treatment by NHS doctors for cold-related illnesses in (i) December 1996 and (ii) January 1997; and what was the average figure for these months in each of the last 10 years; [14261]

(3) how many people in (a) Lancashire, (b) Cornwall, (c) Tyneside and (d) Suffolk received hospital treatment as (i) in-patients and (ii) out-patients, for cold-related illnesses in (1) December 1996 and (2) January 1997; and what was the average figure for these months in each of the last 10 years. [14262]

Mr. Boateng: For the purpose of these questions "cold-related illnesses" have been defined as pneumonia, influenza, bronchitis and hypothermia.

The information available is shown in the attached tables. Information is available only for hospital in-patients and is collected by health authority. Health authority boundaries may not coincide exactly with county boundaries. The latest information available is for the year 1994–95. Information prior to 1989–90 is not held in comparable form.

Information is not collected specifically on "excess winter treatment rates" but figures are provided for July and August each year for comparison with December and January.

"Cold related illnesses" admitted to hospital by primary diagnosis and selected health authority of residence; Estimated number of Finished Consultant Episodes (FCEs), ordinary admissions and day cases combined, NHS hospitals.

Blood Donation

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the National Blood Authority has to introduce a system of informed consent for blood donors, with particular reference to use of blood in (a) the private sector and (b) through overseas sales. [15586]

Mr. Boateng: Information for blood donors explains that donations are primarily used for National Health Service patients but that reasonable requests for blood for patients in the private sector are met and that blood products are sold overseas when demand in this country has been satisfied.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the National Blood Authority is required to hold an open annual general meeting. [15578]

Mr. Boateng: This is not currently required. We are considering the preparation of Regulations to extend the list of bodies to which the Public Bodies (Admissions to Meetings) Act 1960 applies.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the recommendations made by Professor John Cash on the future of the National Blood Service will be the subject of further consultation; and if he will make a statement. [15575]

Mr. Boateng: Professor Cash is carrying out a clinical review of the blood services for Merseyside and the surrounding area. We will consider next steps when we receive the report.

GP Fundholding

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were referred by fundholding GPs to the private sector for secondary health care in the last year for which figures are available. [14831]

Mr. Milburn: In 1996–97, general practitioner fundholders spent £71.5 million (2.7 per cent. of their total expenditure) outside the National Health Service.

A circular covering the priorities and planning guidance for 1998–99 requires health authorities, general practitioner fundholders and trusts to explore the scope to make maximum cost effective use of local NHS capacity before contemplating recourse to private sector hospital providers and, where care is nonetheless commissioned from private hospitals, to report the reasons to the regional office.

Health Service Managers

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS manages have had their jobs redesignated onto nursing or medical pay scales since 1 May. [14833]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not collected centrally.

NHS Spending

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his current estimate of the annual real increase in NHS spending for each year from 1978–79 to 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [13234]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The answer is set out in the table.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made to increase capital spending in the NHS through the private finance initiative. [14062]

Mr. Milburn: The prioritisation of major acute hospital Private Finance Initiative projects and the passing of the National Health Service (Private Finance) Act 1997 in July have resulted in the first two major PFI schemes at Dartford and Gravesham (£115 million) and Carlisle (£87 million) reaching financial close. The other 13 prioritised PFI projects are in the process of having timetables agreed to ensure they all reach financial close by the end of 1998.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each of the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team since 2 May, specifying in each case (a) the participating Minister or Ministers, (b) the destination of the trip, (c) the purpose of the trip and (d) the cost of the trip; and if he will make a statement. AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Industry

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress in establishing a computerised cattle traceability system for Great Britain. [15849]

Mr. Rooker: We are continuing to make good progress towards getting this system in place. I announced to the House on 30 July, Official Report, column 310, that the organisation responsible for administering the system, the British Cattle Movement Service, (BCMS) will be based in Workington, Cumbria. I also announced subsequently that BCMS will take over responsibility for cattle passports. There are now two further developments to report.

First, the Government consider it very important for there to be as much reporting of cattle movements to the new cattle traceability database by electronic mail as possible. This should reduce the paperwork burden on businesses which move large numbers of cattle, such as livestock markets and abattoirs. To help such businesses, we are issuing a protocol today for them to follow in order to communicate with the database by e-mail. Copies are being sent to all livestock markets and abattoirs in Great Britain. I very much hope that markets and abattoirs will invest in the relatively small changes needed to their IT systems over the next few months. This work needs to start now if it is to be completed by the time the new computerised system goes live in 1998.

Secondly, the Government have decided to charge for the cattle traceability system via cattle passports. Farmers applying for cattle passports will pay a fee which will cover the costs of the new computerised system. This follows consideration of a wide range of alternatives, including charging on the basis of the number of movements for which a business is responsible, charging via ear tags, charging at slaughter and charging via an annual registration fee for cattle producers. Charging via passports was chosen because it should be easy to enforce, since cattle without passports cannot go for human consumption. Because it is simple, administrative costs will be kept down so benefiting industry directly. The fee is expected to be in the range £5 to £10 per animal. The livestock industry will be involved in how this method of charging will be implemented, for example through its representatives on the Project Board which is managing the introduction of the computerised system.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Criminal Courts

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department under what statutory authority people under the age of 14 years are generally barred from the public gallery of criminal courts. [14675]

Mr. Hoon: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 12 November 1997:

EXCLUSION OF PERSONS UNDER THE AGE OF 14 YEARS FROM THE PUBLIC GALLERIES OF CRIMINAL COURTS.

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the exclusion of children from the public galleries of criminal courts.

The statutory authority is Sections 36 and 37 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

M11 Link Road (East London)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many complaints have been received by his Department in respect of the building of the M11 Link Road through East London. [14480]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since work began in 1993, my Department (including the former Department of Transport and the Highways Agency) have received 174 complaints about the construction of the scheme. There have also been about 1,200 complaints to the Link Road Offices, which were set up specifically to provide a point of contract for local people during construction.

Housing (London)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) local authority and (b) housing association homes are in each council tax band in each of the London boroughs. [14822]

Mr. Raynsford: Information is available on the number of local authority and housing association properties in each borough; and on the number of all types of properties in each council tax band in each borough. However, information on tenure by council tax band on which to base a cross-analysis is not available.

Cabinet Environment Committee

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to publish the dates of the meeting of the Cabinet Committee on the Environment. [14731]

Mr. Prescott: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 3 November to the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo), Official Report, column 60.

Homelessness

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total number of households (a) nationally and (b) in each London local authority area in respect of which local authorities accepted a duty in each of the last three years where the cause of homelessness was (i) the termination of a private sector assured shorthold tenancy and (ii) housing benefit restrictions. [14819]

Mr. Raynsford: The table below provides the available data on the numbers of households accepted as homeless and in priority need under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 and 1996 Housing Acts for the calendar years 1994, 1995, 1996 and the first 6 months of 1997. The table also shows the numbers of household where the main reason for the loss of their last settled home was the ending of an assured shorthold tenancy. The data collected on the reasons for homelessness do not separately identify where the loss of previous accommodation was attributed to housing benefit restrictions.

Sewage Flooding

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions with whom the responsibility lies for the repairing of private properties damaged by sewage flooding; and if he will take steps to ensure that there is no undue delay in long-term repair works where flooding is taking place on a regular basis. [15169]

Angela Eagle: Responsibility for repairs to properties following an incident of sewage flooding rests with the property owners but they may be able to recover the cost from sewerage undertakers who can be shown to be at fault. In other cases, the cost of repairs can sometimes be recovered under normal building insurance.

In the periodic review of price limits in 1994, the Director General of Water Services allowed for sewerage undertakers to invest £590 million (at 1993–94 prices) over the following ten-year period to address sewer flooding problems. The Director General's 1996–97 report on levels of service recorded a reduction of 9 per cent. in the number of properties flooded by sewers in that year.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ask the Planning Inspectorate to maintain records about the (i) existing and (ii) previous land use, or that previously in existence, when a planning appeal is received. [15156]

Mr. Raynsford: The land uses proposed in development projects being appealed are recorded by the Planning Inspectorate. It has not been considered necessary to record details of existing and previous land uses in planning appeals cases, but a current review will indicate whether full records, including the existing and previous land uses, would be beneficial in future.

Planning Applications

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what procedures exist for ensuring that black and Asian planning applicants are not discriminated against on grounds of race by local authorities. [15285]

Mr. Raynsford: Under section 19A of the Race Relations Act 1976, it is unlawful for a planning authority to discriminate against a person in carrying out their planning functions. Under the 1976 Act, complainants have a right to take their case to the county court as in instances of discrimination in the fields of education, in the provision of goods and services and the disposal and management of premises.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what types of proposed development were involved in each of the applications referred between 5 August 1996 and 3 July 1997 to the Sports Council for England as a statutory consultee under the terms of the Town and Country Planning (General Development Procedure) Order 1995, as amended. [15164]

Mr. Raynsford: Of the 288 applications referred to the Sports Council for England between 5 August 1996 and 31 July 1997, 177 involved non-sports development as follows:

residential (99 applications);
educational (36);
other commercial development (31); and other public/community facilities (11).

One hundred and thirty applications involved the development of sports facilities, the most common of which were:

synthetic turf pitches (46 applications);
sports halls/centres (43);
new playing fields and pitches (25);
pavilions/club houses (19);
floodlights (18);
athletics tracks (13);
swimming pools (11).

Some applications contained proposals for more than one new facility.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the outcome has been of each of the planning applications referred to the Sports Council for England as a statutory consultee under the terms of the Town and Country Planning (General Development Procedure) order 1995, as amended with effect from 5 August 1996. [15162]

Mr. Raynsford: Of the 288 applications referred to the Sports Council for England between 5 August 1996 and 31 July 1997, the Council has been notified of 110 local planning authority decisions. Eighty-seven applications were approved including 20 to which they had objected; 16 were refused including nine with Sports Council for England objections; three were withdrawn; and four were called in.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what sports were concerned in respect of each of the 288 planning applications referred between 5 August 1996 and 31 July 1997 to the Sports Council for England. [15163]

Mr. Raynsford: Under the Town and Country Planning (General Development Procedure) Order, the Sports Council for England is now a statutory consultee in relation to applications for development which affect the use of playing fields. Most playing fields are used for a range of team sports. The Council does not, therefore, have a detailed breakdown of the particular sports affected by the applications referred to them.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which bodies were consulted about the terms of the Town and Country Planning (Demolition—Description of Buildings) Direction 1995. [15158]

Mr. Raynsford: In 1991, the Department issued a consultation paper on proposed controls over the demolition of dwellinghouses. This was circulated to a wide range of organisations including the local authority associations, individual local planning authorities, the main planning bodies, builders' organisations and conservation bodies. Two hundred and one responses were received including one from the Sports Council. This resulted in the Town and Country Planning (Demolition—Description of Buildings) Direction 1992 contained in Circular 16/92. Some amendments were introduced in the 1995 Direction following a 1994 consultation exercise with a similar range of bodies on the demolition of walls, fences and gates in conservation areas.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what procedures exist to monitor the processing of planning applications by local authorities to prevent discrimination on racial grounds. [15284]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government recognises the value of ethnic monitoring and we encourage its use where appropriate. Local planning authorities may wish to request information relating to ethnic origin so that they can monitor the handling of applications. The ethnic origin of an applicant is not a relevant planning consideration and there is no obligation for an applicant to provide this information in order to have a planning application decided.

Road Hauliers (French Dispute)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce interest free bridging finance for road hauliers affected by the dispute in France, pending receipt of compensation from the French Government. [15204]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government was pleased to note the promise made by M. Jospin, the French Prime Minister, last week that claimants affected by the blockades in France a year ago will know within three months whether their claims will be met. The Government will be pressing the French Government to ensure that all claims arising from the recent blockades are dealt with sympathetically and promptly.

Compensation claims against the French Government must be made under French Law and by those affected; the UK Government is not directly involved. Unfortunately, many of those adversely affected by the dispute are unlikely to be eligible under French law for compensation. In the circumstances the approach suggested by the hon. Member would not be appropriate.

Wyre Piddle Bypass

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to reach a decision on the application by Hereford and Worcester county council for transport supplementary grant to build the Wyre Piddle bypass; and if he will make a statement. [15595]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We expect to announce our decision on Hereford and Worcester County Council's bid for transport supplementary grant for the Wyre Piddle bypass in December as part of the Local Transport Capital Settlement for 1998–99.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) his Department's policies and initiatives designed to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and (b) the departmental policies and initiatives designed to reduce other greenhouse gases; if he will estimate for each the annual reduction in tonnage of greenhouse gas emissions achieved in the most recent year for which figures are available compared to those for 1990; and what estimate he has made of further reductions, or increases, predicted for 2000 and 2010, assuming continuation of current policies. [15544]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the United Kingdom's Second Report under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change which was published in February 1997. It reports the UK's progress in implementing its programme for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and gives a projection of what the programme is expected to deliver by 2000. The report projects forward what the current programme is expected to achieve to 2020.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what data he has collated in respect of the average distances between waste collection points and landfill disposal sites. [14529]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 11 November 1997]: There are no such data currently available.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on overseas travel for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997; and if he will provide a breakdown to show (1) air fares and (2) other expenditure relating to overseas travel. [15231]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 11 November 1997]: Figures for years (i) and (ii) are not available. Figures for the Department and its Agencies, where these are available, for years (iii) to (x) are listed below. This information is not held centrally for Non Departmental Public Bodies and the information could only be gathered at disproportionate cost. A breakdown to show air fares and other expenditure is not available.

	Department[1]	Agencies[1]
(iii) 1990–91	1,400	232
(iv) 1991–92	1,707	296
(v) 1992–93	2,390	[2]—
(vi) 1993–94	2,156	[2]—
(vii) 1994–95	1,888	476
(viii) 1995–96	1,807	494
(ix) 1996–97	1,601	419
(x) 1 May to 30 September 1997	568	201

[1] Figures include overseas subsistence as well as travel costs.

[2] Figures are not held separately from other travel costs.

Not all the Department's Agencies hold the information in a way that enables the elements requested to be identified separately. We have, therefore, been able to provide information only where it is available. It should also be noted that because of changes in Departmental structure and accountancy practice over the years the year to year costs are not readily comparable.

House Building (Essex)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the number of new homes that need to be built in (a) the county of Essex; (b) the northern part of Essex; (c) the Borough of Colchester and (d) the District of Tendring. [15350]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 11 November 1997]: Regional Planning Guidance for the South East (RPG9) was issued by the Secretary of State for the Environment in 1994. It was based on advice provided by the regional conference of local authorities (SERPLAN). The Guidance sets out the additional dwellings required in Essex for the period 1991–2006 as 80,000. Guidance does not give a distribution between districts—this is decided in the Essex structure plan, prepared and adopted by the county council. In accordance with the 1994 Guidance, the pre-deposit consultation draft of the replacement Essex County Structure Plan provides for 84,600 new dwellings in Essex in the period 1995–2011, of which 12,650 would be in the borough of Colchester and 6,500 in the District of Tendring.

SERPLAN is currently preparing advice on the revision of RPG9, including the updating of housing requirements to take into account the latest household projections, economic and environmental factors.

Genetically Modified Maize

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on (a) the position taken by his officials and (b) the outcome of proceedings at the meeting of the Article 21 Committee, in Brussels, on 5 November, with respect to Austria'a prohibition of genetically modified maize under Article 16 of Directive 90/220 EEC. [15473]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to my response to the hon. Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) on 6 November 1997, Official Report, column 281.

Food and Drink Outlets

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue new guidancee on the A3 Use Class (Food and Drink) of the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1987 as amended, in order to differentiate between larger and smaller outlets; and if he will make a statement. [14825]

Mr. Raynsford: The Use Classes Order 1987 groups together various types of land use because, in planning terms, they have a similar impact on a neighbourhood. As public houses, wine bars, restaurants and hot food takeaway premises tend to raise the same land use issues, they are all included within Use Class A3. There are no plans to amend or to issue new guidance on this Class, although we keep the arrangements under review.

European Spatial Development Perspective

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to (a) take forward the European Spatial Development Perspective and (b) obtain European Minister's views on urban issues. [15912]

Mr. Caborn: Our aim under the UK Presidency is to complete, in co-operation with other Member States, the draft European Spatial Development Perspective (ESDP). The intention is for this to be agreed by EU Ministers at their informal meeting to be held during our Presidency, in June 1998.

The ESDP is the result of collaboration between Member States and the European Commission to promote an integrated approach to spatial development through partnership, co-operation and sharing expertise. A partially completed draft was agreed by Ministers at Noordwijk in June 1997 as a basis for consultations now taking place within each country. This is now on the Internet. In the UK we have invited interested bodies to take part in a series of seminars to discuss the draft document with others and to send us their written views by 31 December.

During December and January, I will undertake a series of bilateral meetings with other European planning ministers and with the Commission and other European institutions, to discuss with them the results of their national consultations. These meetings will seek to ensure that Member States will be in a position to agree the draft ESDP at their meeting in June. Some of these bilateral meetings will be handled by my hon. Friend the Scottish Office Minister with responsibility for local government, housing and transport, the hon. Member for Edinburgh, North and Leith (Mr. Chisholm).

The UK is also planning a European initiative on urban issues based on good practice experience. We will prepare the initial phase of a possible guidance framework on selected aspects of urban policy in consultation with other Member States. This will form the basis for discussion at the EU ministerial meeting in June.

Environmental Impact Assessment Directive

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representation he has received regarding the implementation of Directive 97/11/EC on the assessment of certain public and private projects on the environment; and if he will make a statement. [16029]

Mr. Caborn: A consultation paper was issued on 30 July setting out in broad terms the Government's proposals for implementing the amended Environmental Impact Assessment Directive (97/11/EC). To date, 170 responses have been received from business, government and environmental organizations in the UK, as well as members of the public. A list of the responses has been placed in the Library of the House. Copies of all the responses have also been placed in my Department's library.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

ADAPT Training Programme

Ms Jennifer Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many bids were made in 1997 in the United Kingdom under the ADAPT training programme to run from 1997 to 1999; how many bids were successful; and what proportion of the United Kingdom allocated budget has been committed to United Kingdom projects. [14264]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In the United Kingdom, 344 bids were assessed in 1997 under the ADAPT Programme. Of these, 185 were successful. The Programme budget for ADAPT for the period 1995 to 1999 is 316,812,000 Million ECU of which 192,174,790 Million ECU—670.7 per cent.—has been committed to projects. 12,508,706 Million ECU has been allocated to Technical Assistance.

Graduates

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people graduated from universities in England and Wales in (a) arts and humanities, (b) science and engineering, (c) medicine and (d) law in (i) 1967, (ii) 1977, (iii) 1987 and (iv) the most recent available year. [14503]

Dr. Howells: The available data covering all higher education institutions in 1996 and former University Funding Council Universities and former polytechnics for earlier years are given in the following table.

First degree graduates[1] in England and Wales

Thousands

Subject[2]	Year of graduation

[2] The definitions of the subject groups were revised in 1985 for former UFC establishments, in 1987 for former polytechnics and for all establishments in 1996.

[3] Including education.

[4] Including subjects allied to medicine.

[5] Including law which cannot be separately identified in all years. In 1996 there were 9.3 thousand graduates in law.

Students (Fees)

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to provide financial support for the tuition fee contributions of part-time students in higher education. [14804]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 6 November 1997, Official Report, column 309.

Charity Collectors

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will instruct jobcentres to require organisations seeking charity collectors to provide references from reputable source; and if he will make a statement. [15055]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Adrian Sanders, dated 12 November 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning your request that he instructs Jobcentres to require organisations seeking charity collectors to provide references from a reputable source. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Jobcentres do, in fact, already have instructions not to accept fund-raising vacancies from or on behalf of charities that are not registered with the Charity Commission or, in Scotland, recognised by the Financial Intermediary Claims Office. In addition the Employment Service accepts vacancies which involve street or house to house collections or sales only where the relevant licence or exemptions have been obtained from the appropriate authority. Our current instructions to Jobcentres require these points to be checked whenever there is doubt about an employer seeking to recruit through the Jobcentre.

I hope this is helpful. I would be happy to look into any particular instance which has given cause for concern.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Jonathan Aitken

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many person hours have been logged in the police investigation into the alleged perjury by Mr. Jonathan Aitken. [15194]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner tells me that 35 man days have been expended so far in the inquiry. The Commissioner informs me that the investigation is continuing and is being pursued as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent to date by the Metropolitan police on their investigation into the alleged perjury by Mr. Jonathan Aitken. [15193]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner informs me that approximately 35 man days have been expended so far. The nature of the inquiry has meant that it has not been possible to cost the police time accurately. The Commissioner also tells me that the investigation is continuing and is being pursued as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 211, how many police officers, and of which rank, have been assigned to the investigation into the alleged perjury of Mr. Jonathan Aitken. [15195]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner informs me that the number of officers deployed on the investigation into Mr. Aitken has varied according to the needs of the inquiry. The officers on the inquiry are selected on the basis of the skills they bring to the task, and not according to their rank.

Europol

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if proposals have been put forward through European Union or intergovernmental channels to provide legal immunity for police officers who are working or have worked for Europol; and if he will make a statement. [15190]

Mr. Michael: The privileges and immunities of Europol staff are set out in a Protocol to the Europol Convention, which was signed on 19 June 1997. The Protocol needs to be ratified in each member state before Europol can take up its activities. For the United Kingdom to ratify the Protocol, an Order in Council under the International Organisations Act 1968 will need to be made. We hope to present a draft Order to the House shortly.

The terms of the legal immunity for Europol staff are outlined in Article 8 of the Protocol, which states that members of the organs of Europol and staff members of Europol shall enjoy "immunity form the legal process of any kind in respect of words spoken or written, or of acts performed by them, in the exercise of their official functions". Article 12 of the Protocol states that the Director of Europol shall be required to waive the immunity "in cases where the immunity would impede the course of justice".

It is important to bear in mind that Europol will not have executive powers. Its role is confined to supporting national investigations through facilitating the exchange of information and offering analytical expertise. Responsibility for subsequent executive action rests with the relevant national bodies which do not enjoy such privileges and immunities.

The Protocol will be evaluated by the Management Board of Europol two years after the Protocol enters into force. It will be reviewed following any amendment to the tasks of Europol as set out in the Europol Convention.

Charities

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will issue a practice direction to owners of premises to encourage the reference checking of organisations seeking permission to make charitable collections; [15056]

(2) if he will arrange for local authority licensing departments to be given information on the relevant activities of registered charities; and if he will make a statement. [15054]

Mr. Michael: The Charity Commission meets licensing authorities regularly and seeks to co-operate with any requests for information about charities or fundraising organisations. There are no plans to issue a practice note to owners of premises. The Commission already encourages owners of premises, such as supermarkets, to check with the Commission if they have any doubts about an organisation seeking permission to carry out a charitable collection. With effect from 29 October this year, basic details of all registered charities can also be checked on the Commission's website at htpp://www.charity-commission.gov.uk.

Gas Appliances (Safety)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been prosecuted for causing death due to poorly maintained gas appliances in each year since 1990. [15159]

Mr. Michael: The following table gives the information requested. The figures relate to instances where the offence concerned had been recorded by the police as homicide. Figures for similar offences where poor installation rather than poor maintenance was involved are also shown.

Perjury

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time between the commission of a perjury and charges being brought by the CPS. [15192]

Mr. Michael: The relevant information is not available. The decision whether to lay a charge of perjury, as of any other offence, is taken by the police in accordance with the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, if they are satisfied that they have enough evidence to do so. The time taken will depend on a variety of factors, including the complexity of any case and the extent to which the necessary evidence is obtainable. In reaching that decision, the police may seek the advice of the Crown Prosecution Service as to whether a prosecution should be brought against a suspect.

Chief Constables (Efficiency)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what means the efficiency of chief constables is measured. [15008]

Mr. Michael: The efficiency of a chief constable, and the means by which it is measured, is a matter for the local police authority.

Police authorities have an obligation under the Police Act 1996 to issue a local policing plan before the start of a financial year, setting out the proposed arrangements for the policing of the authority's area. This plan is produced in conjunction with the chief constable and takes into account objectives determined by the Home Secretary and any objectives and performance targets determined by the police authority.

As soon as possible after the end of the financial year, the authority is required to issue a further report, including, an assessment of the extent to which the local policing plan for that year has been carried out.

At a national level, Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabulary advise the Secretary of State on the efficiency and effectiveness of police forces.

Police Central Support Department

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the ASTRA clause will be included in any contracts put out to tender for the police central support department. [14697]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office has no plans to use the particular clause referred to, but Home Office policy, when putting services out to competitive tender, is to include a clause in the contract which covers the provisions of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (known as TUPE), as amended by the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sudan

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of reports that the NIF regime in Sudan forces school leavers to join the PDF; and if he will make a statement. [15323]

Mr. Fatchett: These reports are accurate. The Sudanese authorities are conscripting secondary school graduates. Some have been sent to the south against their will and without their relatives being informed of their whereabouts. We have expressed our concern about this practice to the Sudanese authorities.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government will take to support the Sudanese peace process. [14832]

Mr. Fatchett: We welcomed the resumption of talks between the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Army on 29 October under the sponsorship of the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD). The UK has supported and will continue to support the IGAD peace process through the Friends of IGAD and latterly through the IGAD Partners Forum (IPF). Both the EU and the IPF have offered material assistance to the IGAD process. We are in regular contact with all parties to the conflict and will continue to stress the need to resolve the civil war through a comprehensive negotiated settlement.

EU Council of Ministers

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances it is the practice to permit officials to deputise for Ministers in meetings of the Council of Ministers of the European Union; and if he will list those Council meetings since 1 May when officials represented their Ministers, naming the Minister in each instance. [15611]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Representation by a senior official on occasions when a Minister is unable to be present for all or part of a Council meeting is normal practice for all member states. British Ministers have attended every Council meeting since 1 May, with the exception of the Consumer Affairs Council on 3 November when my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) was prevented by fog from reaching Brussels.

EU Standing Orders

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what standing orders have been (a) agreed and (b) published concerning the procedures to be adopted at (i) Councils of Ministers of the European Community, (ii) the European Council and (iii) intergovernmental conferences of member states; and what are the distinctive functions of European Council and intergovernmental conferences. [15610]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Rules of procedure governing the Council of Ministers are set out in a Council Decision of 6 December 1993 (93/662/EC). This was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 10 December 1993 (OJ 1993, No. L304/1).

There are no formal rules of procedure for European Councils and Intergovernmental Conferences. It is for the incumbent Presidency to decide, with the agreement of the Member States, how to conduct them.

The functions of European Councils and Intergovernmental Conferences are set out in Articles D and N respectively of the Treaty on European Union.

European Council

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) Ministers of the Crown and (b) officials of Her Majesty's Government were present at the meetings of (i) the European Council and (ii) the intergovernmental conference at Amsterdam. [15612]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Amsterdam Summit comprised (a) the conclusion of the negotiations for the intergovernmental conference and (b) normal European Council business. The UK delegation for the Summit consisted of four Ministers of the Crown and, including support staff, 66 Government officials.

EU General Affairs Council

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the outcome of the General Affairs Council in Brussels on 10 November. [15910]

Mr. Doug Henderson: At the General Affairs Council in Brussels on 10 November the nine A points in document 11996/97 were approved, and the EP resolutions of 20–24 October in document 11109/97 were noted. The texts will be placed in the House as soon as they become available.

The Commission presented a Communication on the future of ACP—EU relations which formed the basis for an orientation debate. This will help inform Commission drafting of an EU mandate for the renegotiation of the Lomé Convention. There was a general welcome for the way ahead set out by the Commission and in particular for the emphasis on poverty, enhanced political dialogue and integration of ACP economies into the world trading environment.

The Council took stock of discussions on enlargement and Agenda 2000. In particular, it considered the role of the Council in the Accession Partnerships of the reinforced pre-accession strategy. The Committee of Permanent Representatives will continue discussion this week.

The Council Secretariat introduced a paper on the incorporation of the Schengen Secretariat into the General Secretariat of the Council. It was agreed that the Schengen Secretariat would be invited to give its opinion on the matter, which will then be discussed further in the Committee of Permanent representatives, before returning to Council.

The Council held a preliminary discussion on the Council Secretary General's paper on implementation of the Declaration annexed to the Amsterdam Treaty on the creation of a Policy Planning and Early Warning Unit. There was wide support for the new CFSPD High Representative taking up his duties as soon as the Amsterdam Treaty is ratified; and for the new Unit to become operational at the same time. The Political Committee and Committee of Permanent Representatives were tasked to take forward detailed work on the Unit and to report back to the Council.

The Council discussed EU relations with Turkey. The Presidency announced its intention to arrange an informal ministerial meeting with Turkey on 24 November.

The Council discussed preparations for the forthcoming visit to the Middle East by the Presidency of the Council and Vice President Marin of the European Commission. The Council agreed on the importance of close co-ordination with the US Administration in support of US efforts to bring about a full resumption of negotiations in the Middle East Peace Process. It also agreed on the need for the Presidency to emphasise EU concerns about the effects of continuing Israeli settlement activity on the prospects for progress and about the postponement of the further redeployments of Israeli troops from Palestinian areas foreseen in the Hebron Agreement.

The Council considered a report from EU Special Envoy Moratinos on ways in which the EU might support agreement between Israel and the Palestinians on the opening of Gaza Airport, the construction of Gaza seaport and the establishment of the "safe passage" arrangements for Palestinians travelling between the West Bank and Gaza. The Council agreed that the report should be considered further at technical level.

The Council discussed negotiations between the EU and Switzerland in the light of new Swiss proposals on the question of land transport through the Alps. It was decided that the Committee of Permanent Representatives should report back to the Council on how the negotiations might be brought to a successful conclusion.

The Presidency reported on preparations and arrangements for the Employment Summit on 21 November.

The Council discussed EU/Albania relations. Ministers agreed that the 1992 Trade and Cooperation Agreement between Albania and the EC should be reactivated to help with the process of economic and political development. A Ministerial level Political Dialogue and official level Joint Committee under the Agreement might be held early in 1998.

The Council adopted a review of the situation in former Yugoslavia in the context of the conditionality in the EU regional approach; and a message to the people of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia setting out the EU's policy. On Bosnia the Council supported the conclusions of the 6 November Steering Board and the High Representative's efforts to reform the Republika Srpska media.

Under any other business, the Council discussed ways of promoting observance by EU Member States of the eight common criteria on arms export agreed by the Council in 1991 and 1992. The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs drew partners attention to our intention to work during our Presidency for an EU Code of Conduct of Arms sales.

Sweden highlighted the opportunity presented by the entry into force 1 December 1997 of the Partnership and Co-operation Agreement (PCA) to tackle some of the irritants in the EU/Russia relationship. Ministers confirmed that a full discussion of the relationship would take place at the 24 November General Affairs Council in preparation for the inaugural Co-operation Council, to be held during the 8–9 December General Affairs Council.

United Nations Register of Conventional Arms

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make available a copy of the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms; and if he will make a statement. [15911]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A copy of the UN Secretary-General's report has been placed in the Libraries of the House. We are disappointed that the 1997 Group of Experts reviewing the operation and development of the UN Arms Register was unable to agree any substantive measures to expand or strengthen the Register. Our aims remain clear: to encourage increased participation by UN member states; to broaden the scope of the Register by including military holdings and procurement from national production on the same basis as imports and exports; to expand current categories of equipment to include weapons of lesser capability; and to encourage the provision of details of the type of equipment transferred. We shall continue to use both bilateral and multilateral contacts to encourage States to work towards these goals. We welcome the Group of Experts' agreement on recommendations for several technical adjustments. We fully endorse these recommendations and urge other States to do the same.

Commonwealth Centre Event

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Commonwealth Centre event held in Edinburgh during the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting. [15961]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The first ever "Commonwealth Centre" highlighted the importance of the role of non-governmental organisations in the Commonwealth. With our full support, the Commonwealth Centre—led by the Royal Commonwealth Society and supported by the Commonwealth Foundation, the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations, the British Council and the Prince's Trust—hosted a full programme of conferences, discussions, workshops and exhibitions by over 100 organisations. It was a tremendous success. Over 25,00 members of the public and 20 Heads of Government, led by my right honourable Friend the Prime Minister and the Commonwealth Secretary General, visited the Centre.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the Government's strategy for maintaining the maximum number of objective 1 and 2 assisted areas in the United Kingdom after 1999. [15030]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

The European Commission published its suggestions for the future of the Structural and Cohesion Funds on 16 July as part of its communication "Agenda 2000". In discussions with the Commission and other Member States, the Government are pressing for future arrangements which are affordable, durable and fair to the United Kingdom as well as to other Member States.

TREASURY

Correspondence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average time taken by his Department to give full answers to letters received from hon. Members. [13959]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 4 November 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 3 November 1997, Official Report, column 5. The 1997 figures will be published in due course.

Taxation (Marginal Rates) Deduction

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people of working age currently face combined marginal rates of withdrawal of tax, national insurance contributions and means-tested benefits of (a) under 50 per cent., (b) 50–69 per cent., (c) 60–69 per cent., (d) 70–79 per cent., (e) 80–89 per cent. and (f) 90 per cent. or above. [14022]

Dawn Primarolo: Figures for the number of families estimated to be facing high marginal deduction rates, for 1996–97 are contained in the following table:

Marginal deduction rate (per cent.)	Number at or above the rate (thousands)
100+	5
90+	105
80+	360
70+	645
60+	655
50+	660

Figures are calculated for benefit units in receipt of income-related benefits where at least one partner works 16 hours a week or more.

National Audit Office

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to extend the powers of the National Audit Office to enable it to have access to the financial records of any organisation which has received public money; and if he will make a statement. [14476]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have no plans to introduce legislation in this area.

Taxation Changes

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the income which would have accrued to the Treasury in each year if income tax rates had remained unchanged after the 1979 general election; [14706]

(2) if he will estimate the additional income, which would have accrued to the Treasury in each year if the four top rates of income tax had not been abolished in March 1988. [14705]

Dawn Primarolo: Such an analysis could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Taxation (Married Couples)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is the Government's policy to retain the independent taxation of husband and wife. [14941]

Dawn Primarolo: All aspects of the tax system are kept under review to ensure it achieves the Government's objectives.

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) the nature and value of contracts his Department has entered into and (b) discussions ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14955]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 7 November 1997]: Since April 1991, when the Treasury installed a central, computerised procurement system, no contract has been let to the Monitor Consultancy. A check of all file titles since 1990 has yielded no record of any contract between 1990 and April 1991 or of any discussions between Ministers, Officials and the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. An exhaustive check of relevant files could only be undertaken at disproportionate cost.

Intelligence Services

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who was responsible for drawing up the terms of reference for the comprehensive spending review of the intelligence agencies. [14514]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 10 November 1997]: The Terms of Reference were approved by Ministers after inter-departmental consultation including the Security and Intelligence Agencies.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the individuals who will undertake the comprehensive spending review of the Intelligence Services announced on 30 October; what arrangements have been made to make public the outcome; and when the review will be complete. [14512]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Staff from the Cabinet Office, the Security and Intelligence Agencies and the Efficiency Unit will undertake the review. Ministers will decide if the outcome of the review should be published. The review will follow the comprehensive spending review timetable and will be completed by summer 1998.

Competition Legislation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 27 October, Official Report, column 587, what will be the scope of the new competition legislation; and with which bodies he (a) has consulted and (b) proposes to consult. [15357]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor of the Exchequer was referring to the Competition Bill, which was introduced in the Hose of Lords on 15 October. A consultation document on the Bill was published in August by the President of the Board of Trade.

Energy-saving Materials

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce VAT on energy-saving materials. [15465]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs have completed their review on this subject and are now preparing a report for publication.

Official Reserves (Reports)

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the publication arrangements will be for the new quarterly report on the official reserves, and if he will make a statement. [16117]

Mrs. Liddell: A report on the reserves in July—September 1997 will be published by the Treasury on Tuesday 2 December. Subsequent quarterly reports will be published two months after the end of the quarter concerned. The report will include data on any holdings by the Bank of England. This follows the Chancellor's statement on 6 May that the Bank will have its own separate pool of foreign exchange reserves which it may use at its discretion to intervene in support of its monetary policy objective.

Monetary Policy Committee

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment of Scotland's current economic conditions was taken into account by the Bank of England's Monetary Policy Committee in reaching its recent decision to raise interest rates. [15519]

Mrs. Liddell: In reaching its decision to raise interest rates on 6 November, the Bank of England's Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) was able to draw on the information gained from business surveys and from the Bank's network of 12 regional agents which cover the whole of the United Kingdom. The Bank has an agency in Glasgow, which is able to obtain a first-hand account of economic conditions in Scotland. Detailed reasons for the interest rate change will be made clear in the MPC minutes, which will be published on 10 December.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 12 November. [14220]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 12 November. [15184]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. I shall have further meetings later today.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

HMS Cavalier

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will take steps to ensure the retention and display in the United Kingdom of HMS Cavalier. [15040]

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to ensure that HMS Cavalier is retained in the United Kingdom. [15518]

Mr. Fisher: The sale of HMS Cavalier has been agreed between South Tyneside Metropolitan Borough Council and Star Cruises of Malaysia. South Tyneside MBC has maintained the ship for 10 years, but now considers the costs too great to continue. The agreement secured with the purchasers means that the ship will be maintained in a good state of repair.

It is not yet clear whether HMS Cavalier requires an export licence on heritage grounds from my Department since there is as yet no firm valuation for the ship. If it is decided that a licence is required, HMS Cavalier will be subject to the normal considerations as to whether a licence should be granted or the decision deferred.

We owe a great debt to those who served in the Navy and I appreciate that the future of HMS Cavalier is a matter of importance to them.

Tourism (Hotels)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, media and Sport how many hotels offered accommodation in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years. [14565]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 10 November 1997]: The table shows the number of establishments listed as hotels[1] by the English, Scottish, Wales and Northern Ireland tourist boards for each year from 1987 to 1996 inclusive. Figures are not available in the form requested for 1989 in Scotland and for 1993 in England and Wales.

[1] The term hotels is defined in a generic sense in England, Scotland and Wales, as it has not proved possible to disaggregate hotels from other types of serviced accommodation.

Year	England[1]	Scotland[2]	Wales[2]	Northern Ireland
1987	24,218	2,969	1,462	130
1988	23,692	2,997	1,589	125
1989	22,936	n/a	1,456	120
1990	22,547	3,285	1,620	122
1991	22,293	2,885	1,512	126
1992	22,007	2,885	1,744	126
1993	n/a	2,927	n/a	122
1994	19,073	2,876	1,438	122
1995	18,838	2,841	1,415	126
1996	18,709	2,080	1,397	129

[1] In England, the figures include hotels, motels, inns and guesthouses.

[2] In Scotland and Wales the figures include motels and inns but not guesthouses.

Communications Sector Regulation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he is taking to provide a single independent body to regulate the communications sector. [14575]

Mr. Fisher: The Government are considering the policy implications of convergence between broadcasting, telecommunications and computing. As part of this work, we will be considering whether and how we might make the structure of regulation more appropriate to any new market structures which might emerge.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Licences

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the export licences revoked by her Department since 1990; and what is the practice of her Department regarding the payment of compensation to the licensees. [13322]

Mrs. Roche: Over the years, a large number of standard individual export licences have been revoked for a range of reasons; for instance, because of the introduction of UN trade sanctions or arms embargos or in response to wrongdoing. It would entail disproportionate cost to provide details of all these licences.

The practice of this Department is to pay compensation for revocation of export licences only where the Department incurs a legal liability as a result of the revocation.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the original cost of the Export Licence Information Processing System; and how much it will cost to develop a new database. [15302]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 10 November 1997]: The cost of developing the Export Control Licensing Information Processing System (ECLIPS), up to point of implementation in March 1995, is put at £4,447,600.

Development of a new database of export licence applications and establishing a system to enable such applications to be submitted in electronic form is expected to cost £424,000.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had or plans to have with her World Trade Organisation counterparts on the problems facing computer systems through the century date change; and if she will make a statement. [13149]

Mrs. Roche: I have no plans to raise this at the WTO, but I will look to raise the issue in more appropriate international fora.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had or plans to have with her EU counterparts on the problems facing computer systems through the century date change; and if she will make a statement. [13154]

Mrs. Roche: I plan to raise this at the Telecommunications Council on 1 December and in bilateral meetings with other Member States.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if it is her policy to adopt the proposed Multilateral Agreement on Investment in its current form; and if she will make a statement. [15168]

Mrs. Roche: The Government support the general aims of the proposed MAI. Many issues remain to be resolved. We are working hard to achieve a successful outcome to the negotiations by April 1998.

Yemen

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will estimate the number of British firms which have offices in Yemen. [14975]

Mrs. Roche: According to the latest information I have there are 20 British firms with offices in Yemen.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she is taking to promote trade and investment in Yemen. [14977]

Mrs. Roche: In partnership with the private sector, other Government departments and the British Embassy, the Department of Trade and Industry supports a full programme of activities to promote trade and investment in Yemen.

Recent activities include: an inward mission of Yemeni business women in May, the Committee for Middle East Trade Round Table meeting between the private sectors of Yemen and Britain in September, an Invest in Yemen seminar in London in September, a DTI supported trade mission to Yemen in September led by HRH the Duke of Gloucester; a DTI seminar addressed by the Yemeni Minister of Health in October, a joint DTI and British Council workshop and forum in October at the House of Commons on Women and Economic Development in Yemen.

Planned future activities include: the President of the Board of Trade and the Minister for Trade the President of Yemen during his visit to Britain in November; the Minister for Trade's visit to Yemen in November; catalogue exhibitions featuring British companies' goods and services Aden, Taiz and Sana'a in November; at least four DTI supported trade missions to Yemen in the first half of 1998, including one on the oil and gas sector and another on tourism, and a further inward mission of Yemeni businesswomen. In conjunction with the British Council the DTI will facilitate the setting-up in Sana'a of a training and advice centre for businesswomen in Yemen.

DTI has also initiated a twinning arrangement between the Chambers of Commerce of Sana'a and London.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the typical quantities of carbon dioxide emitted at each stage of processing in the nuclear fuel cycle for each tonne of nuclear fuel fabricated and used to generate electricity. [14717]

Mr. Battle: It is estimated that nuclear electricity generation leads to emission of about 4 grams of carbon dioxide per kilowatt hour of electricity delivered to the final user. Of theses 4 grams, 3.2 grams are emitted in the process of uranium extraction and the remainder during fuel processing.

Carbon dioxide emissions from nuclear generation are less than 1 per cent. of equivalent figures for any of the major fossil fuelled electricity generation technologies.

Low Pay Commission

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the progress made by the Low Pay Commission; and if it will publish an interim report. [15035]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Low Pay Commission is well advanced on its programme of consultation to obtain views of employers, employees and other interested organisations and individuals on the National Minimum Wage through written evidence and by holding meetings. It has already visited Scotland and Northern Ireland. It will be visiting the North-East in early December and the other English regions and Wales in the near future. The Government have asked the Commission to produce its recommendations by the end of May 1998 and there are no plans for it to publish an interim report.

Copyright

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to bring forward legislation to amend copyright law to take account of the proposals and recommendations set out in the Dearing report; and if she will make a statement. [15622]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have no plans at present to bring forward legislation to amend copyright law in the light of this report. Copyright law allows limited use of material without permission for education, private study and research. Moreover, the draft regulations, which have recently been laid before the House, to implement the UK and EC legislation on databases, also contain exceptions for the purposes of teaching and non-commercial research with regard to databases protected by copyright and/or the new database right. Where copyright clearance is needed for uses of any material, digital or otherwise, I believe that copyright owners are entitled to obtain a suitable reward on their investment. However, I understand that there are discussions between the Publishers Association and the Joint Information Systems Committee on a licensing scheme covering digital material and specifically designed to meet the needs of teachers and researchers. I very much hope that a successful scheme can be devised.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list (a) her Department's policies and initiatives designed to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and (b) the departmental policies and initiatives designed to reduce other greenhouse gases; if she will estimate for each the annual reduction in tonnage of greenhouse gas emissions achieved in the most recent year for which figures are available compared to those for 1990; and what estimate she has made of further reductions, or increases, predicted for 2000 and 21010, assuming continuation of current policies. [15550]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the United Kingdom's Second Report under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change which was published in February 1997. It reports the UK's progresss in implementing its programme for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and gives a projection of what the programme is expected to deliver by 2000. The report projects forward what the current Programme is expected to achieve to 2020.

Film Industry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her Department's estimate of the number of people working in the United Kingdom film industry. [15449]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The number of people working in the United Kingdom film industry in the spring of 1997 is estimated to be 40,000, of whom about 20,000 were involved in film production activities. The remainder were involved in film distribution and projection activities.

Biotechnology

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Government will ensure that full consultation on the EC directive on legal protection of biotechnological inventions takes place before it agrees to a decision at the Council of Ministers meeting on 27 November. [15340]

Mr. Battle: The Commission's proposals for a Directive on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions was circulated for comment in February 1996 to some 50 organisations and interests groups representing the professions, industry, consumers, the research community, groups concerned with the social and environmental impact of biotechnology, and including members organisations of the Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property, a body set up to advise Ministers on all aspects of industrial property.

Interest in the Commission's proposals has increased since the European Parliament adopted its first Opinion in July of this year. To date, more that 150 organisations have received copies of the Commission's revised draft of the proposal which was produced in September in response to the Parliament's first Opinion. Comments have been received from these organisations, and we will take them all into account in determining the United Kingdom's position when this proposal is considered at the Internal Market Council on 27 November.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research she has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated to determine the impact of the Bio-technology Patent directive on (i) research in the medical field, (ii) world food supplies, (iii) conservation of biological diversity and (iv) agriculture in the developing world. [15343]

Mr. Battle: No specific research has been done to determine the impact of the Directive since the European Commission's proposal for legal protection of bio-technological inventions, apart from certain exclusions from patentability for ethical reasons, is substantially consistent with current United Kingdom legislation (the Patents Act 1997).

Moreover, United Kingdom legislation provides for exceptions to patent rights to permit research in all technical areas, including the medical field. The Commission's proposal will permit individual member States, including the United Kingdom, to retain provisions which address the needs of those wishing to carry out research relating to patented inventions.

Patent rights are created under national legislation. The proposed Directive will harmonise certain aspects of the national laws of the member States of the European Union, but rights will continue to be available only on a national basis. It is for other countries, including those in the developing world, and subject to minimum standards required from members of the World Trade Organisation, to provide patent regimes which meet their own needs and objectives. There is, therefore, no direct relationship between the Commission's proposal and matters outside Europe.

The Commission's proposal makes it clear that the Directive is without prejudice to member States' obligations under the Convention on Biological Diversity.

Post Office (Scottish Powercards)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make representations to the managements of Post Office Counters and Scottish Power about the case for reinstating the supply of Scottish Powercards through post offices. [15356]

Mr. Ian McCartney: No. I regard this as a commercial matter for Post Office Counters Ltd. and Scottish Power.

Milk Development Council Tax

Mr. Brady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what representations her Department has received from the dairy industry regarding the tax treatment of the Milk Development Council under section 508 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988. [15551]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have received representations from the National Farmers Union, the Tenant Farmers Association and the Milk Development Council itself regarding the Council's eligibility for approval under the provision.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Dome

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, what is his estimate of the total cost of completing the Millennium Dome at Greenwich; what are the sources of finance for the project; and if he will make a statement. [13273]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The overall budget for the Experience and the associated national programme is £758 million. The Millennium Commission have approved grant of up to £399 million (net) and revenue forecast from sponsorship, commercial activities, visitor receipts and disposal proceeds are £359 million (net).

Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when he intends to reply to the questions from the hon. and learned Member for Medway which appeared on the Order Paper on 27 October relating to the new Millennium Experience Company. [15689]

Mr. Mandelson: The questions referred to by my hon. and learned Friend were answered yesterday.

WALES

Fair Trade (Coffee and Tea)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the oral statement by the Secretary of State for International Development, Official Report, 5 November, column 332, if he will instruct officials in his Department to serve coffee and tea furnished by suppliers who adhere to fair trade standards. [15501]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I refer to the answer which the Prime Minister has given today. All procurement decisions in the Welsh Office are based on the Government's policy of value for money.

SCOTLAND

Electorate

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the electorate of each parliamentary constituency in Scotland (a) for parliamentary elections, (b) for local government elections and (c) the referendum on establishment of a Scottish Parliament. [12698]

Mr. McLeish: The information for parliamentary elections is set out in the table. Statistics for local government elections and the referendum by parliamentary constituency are not held centrally. Inquiries are currently being made to see if this information can be obtained and I will write to the hon. Member.

Community Care

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to implement the recommendations contained in the second report of Session 1996–97 (HC 35) of the Scottish Affairs Committee relating to community care. [13967]

Mr. Galbraith: We welcomed the Scottish Affairs Committee report on community care and our response to the recommendations was published in July. The Government is setting up a Royal Commission on the funding of long-term care for the elderly. We are reviewing the various elements of community care funding and preparing improved guidance on procedures for assessment of older people's needs. We will consult later this year on how best to promote and improve joint working. These measures should maximise quality, choice and value for money in the delivery of community care services.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) total outturn capital receipts generated for each service, (b) total capital receipts generated by way of long leases and (c) the net capital allocations originally granted for each service for each local authority in Scotland in 1994–95. [14932]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 11 November 1997]: As the information requested is rather lengthy, I have arranged for it to be placed in the House libraries. Information on notional capital receipts is not held separately in respect of the housing revenue account and non-housing revenue account capital programmes.

School Buildings (East Lothian)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to public funds of the current investigation by the Accounts Commission into the investment of £7 million for repairs and improvements to schools by the former East Lothian district council; and if he will make a statement. [14933]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 11 November 1997]: The preparation and consideration of the report by the Accounts Commission for Scotland fall within the statutory duties of the Controller of Audit and have not involved any additional expenditure. It would be inappropriate to comment on the matter under consideration as my right hon. Friend may have to consider the matter if it is referred to him by the Commission.

DEFENCE

Military Training and Equipment

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria are used to determine which requests for military training by overseas security forces should be granted. [15198]

Dr. Reid: Requests for training are considered in the light of the Government's ethical foreign policy. Training would not be provided where we considered that it would risk contributing to human rights violations or aggression. Other criteria used to determine which requests for military training by overseas security forces should be granted include: the availability of resources to carry out the training; security considerations; and the defence and foreign policy benefits of providing the training. The defence policy benefits taken into account include in particular whether the provision of military assistance would:

- bring direct benefit to the United Kingdom by (for example by providing access to training areas);
- represent an investment to avoid later expense (for example by averting a conflict in an area where there would be a high likelihood to British forces being committed);
- help to build military interoperability with key potential partners;
- maintain existing close defence links;
- support defence sales.

Fleet Air Arm (826 Squadron)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the 826 Squadron of the Royal Navy's Fleet Air Arm was established; what has been its role since it was established; with what aircraft it has been equipped since it was established; what is its current role and strength; and where it has been based. [15616]

Dr. Reid: Number 826 Squadron was originally to have formed at Lee-on-Solent on 1 January 1940 as a spare squadron, but instead came into existence at Ford on 15 March 1940. The role of the squadron was originally torpedo spotter reconnaissance but became strike and anti-submarine in 1951 and finally anti-submarine in 1955.

The squadron has been equipped with the following aircraft types (in chronological order):

- Albacore I
- Swordfish I
- Barracuda II (ASH)
- Firefly FR1
- Firefly T1
- Avenger TBM-3E

Firefly AS6
Gannet ASI
Wessex HASI
Wessex HAS3
Seaking HASI
Seaking HAS2/2a
Seaking HAS56

The squadron has been based at the following locations:

Ford
Bircham Newton
Eastern Mediterranean
Western Desert
Cyprus
Malta
Algeria
East Haven
Fearn
Dartmouth, Nova Scotia (Royal Canadian Navy)
RNAS Culdrose, Helston, Cornwall

826 Naval Air Squadron was disbanded at Culdrose in July 1993.

Merchant Vessels

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the importance his Department attaches to the role of British merchant vessels and merchant seafarers during (a) peacetime exercises, (b) support and re-supply operations and (c) times of crisis and war. [15434]

Dr. Reid: The Government fully recognise the importance of British merchant shipping and seafarers in the defence context. Indeed, the Department maintains one of the largest civilian fleets in Europe in the form of the specialist ships and civilian crews of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary Service.

We must acknowledge, however, that in today's security environment, a substantial element of any logistic shipping requirement can be satisfied through the international market, where vessels need not necessarily have to be British flagged or crewed as demonstrated during the Gulf War, and in subsequent operations and exercises. The Ministry of Defence is always eager to charter British flagged and crewed ships where they offer best value for money, but we have found that, in general, they are normally fully committed to regular trading activities. Nevertheless, so far during 1997, 24 British registered merchant ships have been on charter to the Ministry of Defence.

While we would plan in any serious crisis or war to charter shipping on the worldwide market, we are very conscious that a core of suitable British flagged or owned ships, which could be used under compulsory measures and manned by UK seafarers, is important.

My Department's future requirements for merchant shipping will, of course, follow on from the conclusions of the Strategic Defence Review.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the name of each merchant vessel, and its country of registration, chartered by his Department for (a) exercises and (b) military support and re-supply operations since 1 January. [15435]

Dr. Reid: The names of merchant vessels and their country of registration for (a) exercises (including training) and (b) military support and resupply operations since 1 January 1997 are as follows:

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the number of United Kingdom merchant vessels available to meet defence needs; and if he will make a statement. [15433]

Dr. Reid: The availability of militarily useful British merchant ships which might be used for defence purposes is kept under regular review as part of our normal planning process. Current figures indicate there are generally enough militarily useful ships for perceived defence needs. My Department, in conjunction with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, regularly monitors the position. The hon. Member will understand that our future requirements for merchant shipping will, of course, follow on from the conclusions of the Strategic Defence Review.

Bosnia

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to compensate those Territorial Army personnel deployed in Bosnia to whom backpay is still owed. [15332]

Dr. Reid: Contrary to recent media reports, there is no endemic or general problem affecting the pay of mobilised TA personnel serving in Bosnia. Mobilised TA personnel are treated as Regular Army for pay purposes and as such were not affected by the separate problems unfortunately experienced by their non-mobilised TA colleagues, which arose from an unforeseen backlog caused by the transfer of work to the Army Personnel Centre (APC) in Glasgow.

I regret that isolated problems have, however, affected the pay and allowances of a limited number of mobilised TA personnel. These stemmed mainly from incomplete or incorrect mobilisation documentation, particularly during early mobilisation exercises. Individual cases have been dealt with as they have arisen, and the Army very much regrets any difficulty caused to affected personnel or their families. I can assure the hon. Gentlemen that affected individuals have had access, as a temporary measure, to financial assistance from their Units until the underlying problems could be resolved.

Because such problems affect individuals in different ways, there can be no automatic mechanisms or all-embracing compensation package. But any individual who has incurred additional expense, such as bank overdraft charges, as a result of pay problems not of their making may apply for reimbursement, subject to the provision of supporting documentary evidence. Claims should be sent to the Pay Division of the APC through the appropriate Regimental Administrative Office.

As a result of the experience gained and lessons learned from these cases, such problems have been largely overcome. Also in the light of this experience, active consideration is being given by the APC—in conjunction with other parties involved in the mobilisation process—to the formation of a permanent mobilisation centre manned with staff experienced in such procedures. The aim is to ensure that there is a more focused approach in order to minimise the occurrence of initial errors which can have serious implications for pay and other matters.

MOD Police

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to outresource the duties now undertaken by the MOD police. [15329]

Dr. Reid: The Strategic Defence Review (SDR) is looking at all aspects of defence capability. Whilst I have no plans to outresource any of the duties of the Ministry of Defence Police, it is too early to assess the potential impact of the SDR on the Force.

Territorial Army

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice he has received from the Territorial Army brigadiers concerning the size, shape and future role of the Territorial Army. [15334]

Dr. Reid: The future size, shape and role of the Territorial Army will be determined by the Strategic Defence Review. We are consulting very widely in the course of this work. In particular I expect to have discussions shortly with Brigadier Holmes, who took up his responsibilities as Director of Reserve Forces and Cadets this month. Other members of the TA, like all Service personnel, are welcome to make submissions direct to the Review Team.

Departmental Open Day

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to hold a departmental open day. [15337]

Dr. Reid: There are no plans at present for a central departmental open day. Considerable effort is put into publicising the work of the Department and the individual Services. My Department has an annual touring exhibition, the Services Presentation Teams provide information on MOD and the Services, and many individual units and bases hold local open days.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31 July, Official Report, column 470, what was the aim of Exercise Senator 97; what was the scenario of the exercise; and what were the results of the exercise. [15608]

Dr. Reid: The aim of Exercise Senator 97 was to test procedures in the event of an accident involving nuclear weapons on British territory. The scenario postulated an accident involving a nuclear weapons convoy in transit through Lincolnshire. There has been unanimous agreement from participants that the exercise was a success, and a number of observations are being followed up with appropriate agencies. A copy of the summary report from all participating agencies will be placed in the Library of the House in due course.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where are the headquarters of the RAF Nuclear Accident Response Organisation. [15559]

Dr. Reid: The Headquarters of the RAF Nuclear Accident Response Organisation is based at the Headquarters of the RAF Logistics Command at RAF Brampton, Huntingdon.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many editions of the local authority and emergency service information on nuclear weapon transport contingency plans have been produced since 1967; and on what dates. [15617]

Dr. Reid: Two editions of the Local Authority and Emergency Service Information on Nuclear Weapon Transport Contingency Plans (LAESI) document have been produced by the Ministry of Defence. The first edition was issued in January 1993 and the second edition in March 1996.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from other Government Departments concerning the Strategic Defence Review; and whether he intends publishing them. [15594]

Mr. George Robertson: Other Government Departments have been, and will continue to be, consulted throughout the Strategic Defence Review process. Their inputs represent internal Government advice and opinion and are therefore covered by exemption 2 (Internal discussion and advice) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. We have no plans to publish them.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he plans to publish the Strategic Defence Review in association with 1998–99 Defence Estimates; and if he will make a statement. [15336]

Mr. George Robertson: The 1998–99 estimates for defence votes will be published as part of the Main Supply Estimates in March 1998. The results of the Strategic Defence Review will be published separately at the conclusion of the Review.

WE-177 Bomb

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31 July, Official Report, column 473, in what ways the three types of WE-177 bomb are different from each other. [15602]

Dr. Reid: The three types of WE-177 bomb differed in terms of weight, size and yield. I am withholding detailed information about these weapons as it is covered under exemption 1 of the code of practice on access to Government information relating to defence security and international relations.

Deputy Supreme Allied Commander Europe

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by appointment the selection committee for nominating the 4 star general for the post of Deputy SACEUR. [15331]

Dr. Reid: A candidate for the 4 star NATO post of Deputy SACEUR is nominated by the Senior Appointments Committee, which comprises the Chief and Vice Chief of the Defence Staff, and the Chiefs of the Naval, General and Air Staffs.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name those British officers who have held the post of Deputy SACEUR and who have (a) subsequently served on the Army Board and (b) become Chief of the General Staff. [15330]

Dr. Reid: None.

HMS Tiger

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31 July, Official Report column 469, when the HMS Tiger cruiser was decommissioned. [15609]

Dr. Reid: The cruiser HMS Tiger was decommissioned on 4 May 1979.

Helicopters

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which NATO countries separate the command, control and ownership of attack and support helicopters between the army and air force. [15328]

Dr. Reid: Among NATO countries only the United Kingdom separates the ownership of anti-tank and support helicopters, between the Army and Royal Air Force respectively. The Strategic Defence Review is examining a range of options for the structure and management of the three Services' helicopter forces.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the cost benefits to his Departmental budget of combining attack and support helicopters under one service. [15327]

Dr. Reid: The Strategic Defence Review is examining a range of options for the structure and management of the three Services' helicopter forces, which will be costed as appropriate. It would be premature to discuss particular options at this stage in the Review process.

Ministry Buildings

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's plans for modernisation of the MoD Main Building in Whitehall. [16062]

Mr. George Robertson: My Department continues to examine options, under the Public-Private Partnership scheme, for the long overdue modernisation of the Main Building and its subsequent support. The building was constructed in the 1950s and does not meet today's needs. A major programme of work is required to correct the many current deficiencies and to provide a modern working environment, flexibility for the future and more cost effective use of space.

Following the recently completed evaluation of outline proposals, I have approved the next stage of the project which involves the issue of an Invitation to Negotiate to a shortlist of three consortia: Amey/Kvaerner, MoDeM (led by the Bucknall Group) and Mapeley Defence (led by the Nations Bank).

I am keen to see the project proceed, and I am encouraged by the outline proposals put forward by the three selected consortia. The next stage challenges the consortia to work closely with my Department to demonstrate their ability to come up with a winning and good-value-for-money scheme.

Detailed responses from the consortia will be closely reviewed in the course of the next year as the competition proceeds. Final approval to sign a contract for the scheme will, of course, depend on satisfactory evidence that overall value for money can be achieved.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tourism

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on each (a) grant and (b) loan made by the Northern Ireland tourist board to private sector projects for the provision of (a) small hotels, (b) guest inns, (c) self catering facilities and (d) bed-and-breakfast facilities in each year since 1993 indicating the schemes involved and the source of the tourist board's budget. [14495]

Mr. Ingram: Since 1993, the Northern Ireland tourist board has made grants to the projects listed in the tables. Small hotels have been defined as those with fewer than 20 bedrooms at the time the offer was made. During the period no loans were made. Redeemable Preference Shares of £330,000 were issued by the promoters in the case of the Manor House Hotel, Killadeas, Co. Fermanagh.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has received in relation to the decision not to re-appoint Ms Geraldine Donaghy to the Southern Health and Social Services Board; and if she will make a statement. [14538]

Mr. Worthington: There have been a number of representations in relation to the decision not to re-appoint Ms Donaghy to the Southern Health and Social Services Board. These include three from Members of this House—Mr. Seamus Mallon, Mr. Roger Stott and Mr. Harry Barnes, two from District Councils in Northern Ireland, the Chairperson of the Southern Health and Social Services Council, the Northern Ireland Women's Coalition and 14 from other individuals and community groups.

Ms Donaghy's re-appointment has been handled in accordance with the Code of Practice and Guidelines issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. However, she remains dissatisfied with the outcome and has exercised her right of appeal to the Commissioner for Public Appointments and lodged a complaint with the Fair Employment Tribunal.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many out-going non-executive members of each health board in Northern Ireland were (a) re-appointed, without undergoing formal interview, (b) re-appointed after undergoing formal interview, (c) not re-appointed and not offered a formal interview and (d) not re-appointed after undergoing formal interview when the existing boards were constituted. [14539]

Western Health and Social Services Board	Nil

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the procedures and criteria employed by the Department of Health and Social Services for the recruitment of non-executive directors of each health and social services board in Northern Ireland. [14540]

Mr. Worthington: Appointments to Health and Social Services Boards in Northern Ireland are made by the Department of Health and Social Services, subject to the approval of the Minister. When an initial term of office expires, there is no automatic right to re-appointment.

Non-executive members are not appointed as representatives of any specific group or organisation but in a personal capacity for the skills and experience they can bring to the Board. These may include relevant professional skills, management skills gained in the public, private or voluntary sectors or an ability to bring a user perspective to the Board.

The DHSS Appointment Procedures are governed by the Code of Practice and Guidelines issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments who monitors, regulates and approves their application. The main elements of the Procedures are:-

advertising of appointment opportunities;

job descriptions and person specifications for all posts;

a formal and open selection process based on merit;

an independent member of all interview panels; and a formal complaints procedure.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many non-executive directors of each health board in Northern Ireland had completed their first period of office by 31 March; and how many of these indicated their willingness to serve a further term of office. [14541]

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Micro-credit Agencies

11. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to further the development of micro-credit agencies. [14118]

Mr. Foulkes: My Department is recognised as one of the leading bilateral donors in microfinance, which provides particular benefits to poorer people. We plan to continue to increase the level of our support, beyond the £75 million already committed.

Bilateral Debt

12. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she has made to write off the bilateral debt of the poorest countries. [14119]

Clare Short: The British Government have already written off £1.2 billion of all aid debt. On 15 September, I announced a new programme to cancel the aid debts of lower income Commonwealth countries which are committed to the internationally agreed development targets, to good government, to rooting out corruption, and applying economic policies which benefit the poor. Offers have already been made to seven countries and discussions have started with others.

Montserrat

13. Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her current assessment of the future habitability of Montserrat. [14120]

Mr. Foulkes: I discussed with the Chief Scientist today the latest scientific advice. This raises further concerns about the safety of the north of the island, which will need to be assessed urgently.

Know-how Fund

14. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the future of the know-how fund. [14121]

Mr. Foulkes: My Department will continue to support the countries in transition in Central and Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet Union through the know-how Fund. We shall seek particularly to ensure that the benefits of transition are sustainable and the needs of the poorest are properly protected.

16. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance had been offered to Belarus and the Ukraine from the know-how fund during the last year; and if she will make a statement. [14123]

Clare Short: In 1996–97 the know-how fund provided around £800,000 in technical assistance for Belarus and around £9 million for Ukraine. We are concerned about the deteriorating human rights situation in Belarus and the growth of poverty in the countries of the former Soviet Union and are adjusting our programmes accordingly.

Human Rights

15. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with other countries relating to the linking of international aid to records of human rights. [14122]

Clare Short: In all my meetings I make it clear that our Government are committed to a rights-based approach to human development. My Department's particular concern is for the rights of the poor to make their voices heard and to secure the social and economic rights laid down in the universal declaration of human rights. All our work is devoted to this end.

UNESCO

17. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to develop a partnership between UNESCO and British parliamentarians. [14124]

Clare Short: I am keen to encourage as broad a UK relationship as possible with UNESCO. I would be delighted to pursue any ideas my hon. Friend might have for strengthening parliamentary links with the Organisation.

Bananas

18. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support her Department will give to small farmers in the Caribbean currently dependent on the banana crop. [14125]

Mr. Foulkes: Current UK assistance (97–98, £6 million) aims to strengthen the infrastructural and policy framework within which new initiatives can flourish and to raise educational standards so that people can take advantage of new opportunities. This complements substantial EC resources designed to promote efficiency in the banana industry, agricultural and economic diversification.

22. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to challenge the World Trade Organisation judgment concerning Caribbean banana producers. [14129]

Mr. Foulkes: The present EU bananas regime represents a serious attempt to meet our obligations to developing countries, in particular the African, Pacific and Caribbean (ACP) countries. It is disappointing that some parts of the regime have now been found incompatible with World Trade Organisation (WTO) rules. The UK supported the EU in its appeal against the ruling of the Dispute Settlement Panel but the WTO Appellate Body upheld most of the Panel findings. There are no further avenues of appeal left open to the EU. As firm adherents of the WTO process, we naturally accept therefore that the Community's arrangements will need to be brought into conformity with the WTO's rules.

The Government are considering the WTO findings on the EU banana regime in liaison with the Commission in Brussels, who have the principal responsibility for proposing revised arrangements which conform to our WTO obligations. As leading advocates of the legitimate interests of those developing countries in the Caribbean who have traditionally supplied the UK market, we intend to play a major role in developing a solution to the problem and are examining a number of proposals. Caribbean banana producers can rest assured that we have their interest high in our agenda.

Development Assistance Committee

19. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development who represented the UK Government at the DAC Expert Group on Women in Development held in Paris on the 2 and 3 October; and if she will make a statement on the meeting. [14126]

Clare Short: The UK Government was representated by a Senior Social Development Adviser from my Department.

During the last 15 years the Group has played a catalytic role in ensuring that development agencies address the rights and needs of women. In the preparations for the Beijing Conference the UK served as Chair to the Group and is currently a member of the Bureau (Steering Group).

At its most recent meeting the Group changed its title to Gender Equality and Women's Empowerment in Development Cooperation. The Group's future workplan was agreed. Major items include integrating gender into the DAC's work on poverty eradication, ensuring that gender equality is handled as a cross-cutting issue in all the development Targets and presenting Guidelines on Gender Equality for endorsement by the DAC.

World Bank Report

20. Mr. Prior: What the Secretary of State for International Development what response her Department has made to the World Bank's World Development report 1997: the State in a Changing World. [14127]

Clare Short: In discussion with the President of the World Bank, I welcomed this report and, in particular, its recognition of the enabling role of the state in promoting pro-poor growth and providing services for poor people. My Department also participated in, and part-financed, a meeting of the European Policy Forum which brought together European donors, academics and the World Bank to assess the report's main messages. My officials have also discussed the report with the World Bank with a view to assessing the relevance of its conclusions for our own work.

Iran (Refugees)

21. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will estimate the numbers of refugees in Iran; and what action she is taking, with our European partners, to provide assistance to them. [14128]

Clare Short: According to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) there are approximately 2,016,000 refugees in Iran, including:

1.4 M from Afghanistan;

580,000 from Iraq;

36,000 others (of which the main groups are from Zaire, Rwanda, Angola, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Bosnia, Tajikstan, and Azerbaijan).

The European Community Humanitarian Office have given over £28 million during the period 1992–1996 of which the UK share is approximately £4.7 million. It's programmes are regularly discussed among EU partners.

Tibet

23. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to provide assistance to the peoples and environment of Tibet. [14130]

Clare Short: We are currently contributing some £680,000 to five projects which are being implemented by non-governmental organisations. These projects—in the fields of education, income generation and environmental health—are helping to address the needs of rural and urban communities within Tibet and of Tibetan refugees in India.

Indonesian Rain Forests

24. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's work in relation to Indonesian tropical rain forests. [14131]

Clare Short: Forests provide vital resources for poor communities in Indonesia. Since 1991, my Department has spent over £25 million supporting efforts in Indonesia to conserve and enhance those resources through sustainable forest management. We are now preparing a new programme that will focus on increasing the benefits that poor forest dwellers get from their forests. This will improve the lives of the needy and encourage better protection against destructive forest clearing, logging and fires.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

25. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will link aid to the entities in Bosnia-Herzegovina to progress in the implementation of the Dayton Agreement. [14132]

Clare Short: Yes. Britain and other Governments seek to ensure that aid not only brings practical benefits but encourages Bosnian compliance with Dayton.

Aid Target

26. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to meet the UN target of 0.7 per cent. of gross domestic product for overseas aid. [14133]

Clare Short: As our Manifesto and the Government's White Paper on International Development makes clear, we are committed to the UN 0.7 per cent. oda/GNP target and to reversing the decline in UK aid spending of the past 18 years which was cut from 0.51 per cent. of GNP to 0.27 per cent. under the previous administration.

Slavery

27. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what international initiatives she is supporting to combat slavery. [14134]

Clare Short: The United Kingdom has strengthened its commitment to the work of the International Labour Office (ILO) to strengthen the implementation of international conventions covering slavery and bonded labour especially where it affects children. I attended the International Conference of Child Labour in Oslo last month and was able to give strong support for the work of both ILO and United Nations Children's Fund in combating bonded child labour.

In Britain we are providing support for projects including Anti-Slavery International among others.

Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency

28. Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the 1997 annual report of the World Bank's Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency. [14135]

Clare Short: I am pleased that MIGA's 1997 Annual Report shows continuing growth in demand for insurance cover for private investments in developing countries. At the meeting of the Development Committee of the Bank in Hong Kong in September, I joined fellow Governors in agreeing a solution to MIGA's capital constraint, which will enable it to continue to expand its guarantee business.

Small and Medium Businesses

29. Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of Stae for International Development what steps her Department is taking to encourage small and medium businesses in developing countries. [14136]

Clare Short: My Department is actively supporting the development of micro, small and medium enterprises. They are an essential means of providing poor people with greater access to income and employment opportunities.

The budgetary commitment to current projects exceeds £100 million. This is expected to continue to increase, notably in Eastern, Central and Southern Africa and South Asia.

DFID's support takes three forms: improving the policy and regulatory environment, creating or strengthening local financial institutions, e.g. leasing companies or microfinance institutions and supporting local organisations providing cost effective business development services, e.g. skills training, market access.

Belarus

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department is providing to the children of Belarus suffering from the after-effects of the Chernobyl disaster; and if she will make a statement. [15087]

Clare Short: The UK's Environmental Know How Fund has previously assisted post-Chernobyl programmes, including food screening for radioactive contamination. We are not presently providing direct assistance to Chernobyl victims in Belarus. We contribute through the EU and to international organisations such as the World Health Organisation who are supporting Chernobyl victims.

Investment

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what are her Department's plans for encouraging ethical and socially responsible investment in developing countries. [14116]

Clare Short: I am very keen to encourage and reinforce the fair trade and ethical investment consumer movements in every way possible. My department has numerous and growing contacts with groups interested in fair trade and ethical investment in developing countries. The potential of these movements to improve labour standards and environmental protection for large numbers of people in developing countries is considerable. We are assisting British Companies and NGOs to work together towards these goals.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Press Releases

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many press releases have been issued by her Department since May 1997; and how many press releases have been released under the heading "Minister for Women" since May 1997. [14064]

Mr. Denham: The information is in the table.

	Total number of press releases	Minister for Women press releases only
DSS Headquarters	178	24
Benefits Agency	22	0
Child Support Agency	8	0
Information Technology Services Agency	2[1]	0
Contributions Agency	16	0
Total	224	24

1. Issued on behalf of ITSA by DSS Headquarters and is included in the total for DSS HQ.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will place in the Library lists of those individuals and organisations to whom Departmental press releases are sent (a) by post, (b) by fax and (c) by electronic mail. [14065]

Mr. Field: The information has been placed in the Library.

Pensions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government that the state pension alone should provide pensioners with an adequate income. [14571]

Mr. Denham: The key objective of our review of pensions is to ensure that pensioners should have an adequate income in retirement; that they should share fairly in rising national prosperity and that public finances should be both sustainable and affordable. For most people, security in retirement will come from a combination of the basic State Pension and a second pension. One of the fundamental challenges of the review is to agree where the responsibility for funding pensions should lie and to establish the right balance between the public and private sectors.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to address the effects of changing jobs and taking breaks on women's pension arrangements. [14572]

Mr. Denham: A wide-ranging review of pensions was announced on 17 July. One of the Government's fundamental challenges in pensions is to narrow the pensions gap between men and women so as to give women more security in retirement. Many private pensions are simply not flexible enough to cope with working patterns of women. Women still earn less on average than men and are more likely to have caring responsibilities.

The Government recognise that carers—many of whom are women—who cannot contribute to second pensions because of caring responsibilities, make a valuable contribution to society but lack the opportunity to provide for their own future. That is why the Government are looking at ways to develop the administrative structure of SERPS so as to provide a citizenship pension for those who care for others.

We are also committed to developing secure, flexible and value for money stakeholder pensions. These will be aimed at those on modest incomes, working part time or with intermittent work patterns, who often do not have the opportunity to join a good occupational pension scheme, or for whom a personal pension is unsuitable. Stakeholder pensions should therefore be of particular help to women. The Government's National Childcare Strategy will also provide greater opportunities for women to participate in the wider economy so that they are able to contribute to their own pensions.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will ensure that the pensions structure takes account of the effects of divorce. [14573]

Mr. Denham: We are modernising the welfare state to take account of social changes, such as a higher divorce rate, and to enable pensioners to have an adequate income in retirement. As a step towards this the Government is committed to introducing pension sharing for divorcing couples. We aim to do so from April 2000.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to provide unbiased, accessible and affordable professional advice for those planning their pensions. [14574]

Mr. Denham: Improving education and awareness of pensions is a key focus of the Pensions Review process. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 23 July the setting up of a Pensions Education Working Group to consider how pensions education and awareness issues might be co-ordinated, well targeted and effective. The Group has also been asked to advise the Secretary of State by the end of January 1998 what other actions are needed to improve knowledge of pensions.

The Department is reviewing the provision of pensions literature to reflect the Government's wish to empower ordinary people by giving them the information they need to make the right decisions about their pension provision, whatever it might be, now and in the future.

Heating or Eating Appeal

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Government have to contribute to the Heating or Eating Appeal organised by Help the Aged. [15653]

Mr. Denham: We welcome and support the work of charities in complementing the welfare provision the Government make to vulnerable members of society. The Government are already tackling the problems associated with vulnerable people keeping warm during cold weather. We have already taken action to cut fuel costs and make homes easier to heat. We are committed to examining the means of delivering more automatic help to the poorest pensioners.

Social Fund Cold Weather Payments of £8.50 will again be issued automatically to those pensioners in receipt of Income Support, when the average temperature in their area is recorded as, or forecast to be 0°C or below, over seven consecutive days. Last winter, the Cold Weather Payments scheme triggered a total of 125 times, involving 55 of the 70 Meteorological Office weather stations used. Almost five million payments worth over £42 million were issued to an estimated 2.7 million people.

HEALTH

Myodil

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons his Department has decided not to proscribe the use of Myodil in myelography. [14603]

Ms Jowell: Myodil was voluntarily withdrawn from the market for commercial reasons by the manufacturers in 1987. The product licence for Myodil expired on 2 June 1992 and was not renewed. Myodil is therefore no longer licensed.

Adhesive Arachnoiditis

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to institute an inquiry into adhesive arachnoiditis, with special reference to the alleged failure of several doctors to disclose to patients suffering from the condition that they have contracted it; and if he will make a statement. [14607]

Ms Jowell: We have no plans to institute an inquiry into this issue. The Department has no knowledge of the alleged failure of disclosure by doctors.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has given to health authorities on the assumptions to be used when calculating hospital bed occupancy rates. [15467]

Mr. Boateng: The Department of Health collects information on bed occupancy from National Health Service trusts. Guidance on completion of these central returns is included in the NHS Data Manual, copies of which are available in the Library.

An occupied bed day is defined as "one which is occupied at midnight on the day in question". Occupancy rates are calculated by dividing the number of occupied bed days by the number of available bed days.

For beds in wards only open during the day, an occupied bed day is one in which at least one day case has taken place during the day.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department's plans for all inspection reports for nursing homes to be made available to the public will include reports of inspections that have already been carried out. [15182]

Mr. Boateng: No. From 1 April 1998 all nursing home inspection reports carried out after that date will be available to the public. In some areas inspection reports are already made available to the public with the agreement of nursing home proprietors. We will consider what further action might be taken within the existing legal framework to allow access to past reports.

Waiting Lists (South-West)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list by health authority in (a) Cornwall and (b) Devon, the number of people on

NHS waiting lists for (i) 0–11 months, (ii) 12–18 months and (iii) more than 18 months for (1) each year and (2) each quarter since 1992; [15528]

(2) if he will list for the South and West Region the number of people on NHS waiting lists for (a) 0–11 months, (b) 12–18 months and (c) more than 18 months for (i) each year and (ii) each quarter since 1992. [15527]

Mr. Milburn: Health authority based waiting list information is contained in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England (Resident Based)". The first published information shows the position on 30 June 1996. Provider based information, which has been available since prior to 1992 and from which regional figures can be obtained, is contained in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England". Both these publications are produced on a quarterly basis and copies are available in the Library.

NHS Spending Targets

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the distance from spending target of each NHS trust in (a) Cornwall and (b) Devon in each year since 1992 for which figures are available. [15472]

(2) if he will list the deficits of (a) health authorities and (b) national health service trusts in (i) Devon and (ii) Cornwall in each year since 1979 for which figures are available. [15388]

Mr. Milburn: Details of the income and expenditure deficits of (a) health authorities and (b) National Health Service trusts in (i) Devon and (ii) Cornwall since 1991–92 are given in the table. Figures for earlier years will be placed in the Library shortly. The distance from spending target in NHS trusts has been interpreted as the income and expenditure position since NHS trusts are not set spending targets as such but receive income through contracts for healthcare provision to cover their expenditure.

Deficits (Health Authorities and Trusts)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average total underspend in English national health service trusts in each year since 1992 for which figures are available. [15384]

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the average deficit of (a) health authorities and (b) national health service trusts in England in each year since 1979 for which figures are available; [15387]

(2) if he will list the average distance from spending target of NHS trusts in England in each year since 1992 for which figures are available. [15471]

Mr. Milburn: Details of the total and average income and expenditure surpluses/deficits for health authorities and National Health Service trusts in England since 1991–92 are given in the table. Figures for earlier years will be placed in the Library shortly.

The distance from spending target and underspend in NHS trusts have been interpreted as the income and expenditure position since NHS trusts are not set spending targets as such but receive income through contracts for healthcare provision to cover their expenditure.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list by health authority the number of community hospitals in (a) Cornwall and (b) Devon in each year since 1979 for which figures are available; [15529]

(2) what was the average number of community hospitals per health authority in each year since 1979 for which figures are available; [15530]

(3) how many community hospitals there were in England in each year since 1979 for which figures are available. [15531]

Mr. Boateng: Information about the number of community hospitals in England is not collected in central returns. However the Department of Health is providing a grant to the Community Hospitals Association to update its directory of community hospitals.

Information available from the three health authorities in Devon and Cornwall shows that the total number of community hospitals in each health authority in 1997 is as follows:

Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Health Authority: 17

North and East Devon Health Authority: 21

South and West Devon Health Authority: 12

Information on earlier years is not readily available.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the total spending on community hospitals in England in each year since 1979 for which figures are available; [15468]

(2) what was the average health authority spending on community hospitals in England in each year since 1979 for which figures are available (a) per hospital and (b) per health authority; [15469]

(3) if he will list by health authority the spending on community hospitals in (a) Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly and (b) the three health authorities in Devon in (i) cash terms, (ii) per capita and (iii) 1979 prices in each year since 1979 for which figures are available. [15470]

Mr. Milburn: Financial information is collected on the basis of National Health Service trusts. Information is not therefore available about individual hospitals. Health authorities commission community health services from a wide variety of NHS trusts. Central information about this cannot be disaggregated by NHS trust or individual hospital.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list by health authority the number of beds in community hospitals in (a) Cornwall and (b) Devon in each year since 1979 for which figures are available; [15526]

(2) if he will list the (a) total and (b) average number of beds in community hospitals in England in each year since 1979 for which figures are available. [15525]

Mr. Boateng: Information on hospital beds is published annually in "Bed Availability for England" copies of which are available in the Library. The information is for National Health Service trusts and is collected by ward type. It is not possible to disaggregate information about community hospitals from the wider NHS trusts information.

Information available from the three health authorities in Devon and Cornwall shows the total number of community hospital beds in each health authority in 1997 is as follows:

Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Health Authority: 467

North and East Devon Health Authority: 532

South and West Devon Health Authority: 344

Information on earlier years is not readily available.

GP Fundholders (South-West)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by health authority in (a) Cornwall and (b) Devon the total underspend by GP fundholders in each year since 1992 for which figures are available. [15383]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is in the table. These figures are the total savings on general practitioner fundholders' budgets, and savings per fundholding practice. The figures for 1996–97 are provisional.

Cold Weather (Elderly People)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will commission research into the effects of cold weather on the health of the elderly. [15639]

Mr. Boateng: There are currently no plans to commission any such research. It is known that mortality rises steeply in winter and that the increase in deaths is chiefly among people 60 or older. The Department, in partnership with the Benefits Agency and the voluntary sector, runs an annual campaign—Keep Warm, Keep Well—which aims to provide information on health, benefits and home improvement during the winter.

Community Nurses

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the spending on community nurses in each health authority in (a) Cornwall and (b) Devon in each year since 1979 for which figures are available; [15659]

(2) if he will list the average spending on community nurses for English health authorities in each year since 1979 for which figures are available. [15660]

(3) if he will list the spending on community nurses in England (a) in cash terms and (b) at 1979 prices for each year since 1979 for which figures are available. [15661]

Mr. Milburn: Information on spending on community health nursing can not be separated centrally from expenditure on all nursing staff. The table shows expenditure on community nursing services of which community nursing staff will form the major part. The information is not available for individual health authorities.

1. The GDP factor was used to calculate the 1979–80 prices.
2. Figures for 1991–92 onwards cannot be compared with those for earlier years due to changes in accounting practices following the NHS reforms.

Delayed Discharges

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list by National Health Service trust in (a) Cornwall and (b) Devon the number of delayed discharges in each year since 1992 for which figures are available; [15385]

(2) what was the average number of delayed discharges in English National Health Service trusts in each year since 1992 for which figures are available. [15386]

Mr. Boateng: Information on delayed discharge is collected by the Department of Health on a health authority basis and not by National Health Service trust. The available information is in the table. The information is collected on a survey basis and shows the number of patients aged 75 and over, who are ready for discharge, but still occupy a hospital bed on a given day in the quarter. It is not the total number of delayed discharges in that quarter.

Health Services (Rural Areas)

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has given to health authorities on the accessibility of acute and community hospital services in remote rural areas. [15466]

Mr. Boateng: We have not issued any detailed guidance on models of health care in remote rural communities. However, we are currently reviewing issues relating to effective service configurations, including access to services for patients.

It is the responsibility of individual health authorities to determine the most appropriate balance of health services for their populations, and they are accountable to the National Health Service Executive for doing so.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Director-General of Water Services

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that independent reporters used by the Director General of Water Services in his 1999 Review to challenge the cost and investment estimates of the water companies have no contractual arrangements with the water companies on which they are reporting. [14491]

Angela Eagle: The arrangements for reporters used by the Director General of Water Services in carrying out his statutory duties are a matter for him.

The Director has consulted widely on the arrangements for reporters, firstly in his open letter ("MD126") issued on 20 March 1997 and more recently in his consultation paper about the business planning process for the 1999 Periodic Review. Both documents are in the Library. He has asked for comments on his proposals by Friday 14 November.

Household Evictions

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many household evictions from (a) local authority and (b) housing association properties involved (i) children and (ii) one or more children who were statemented as having special needs in each of the last three years; [14821]

(2) how many households were evicted from (a) local authority and (b) housing association properties in each of the last three years; [14823]

(3) how many household evictions for (a) local authority and (b) housing association properties, were as a consequence of (i) rent arrears, (ii) anti-social behaviour, (iii) criminal activities and (iv) other causes in each of the last three years; [14820]

(4) how many households were accepted for re-housing under the terms of the Children Act 1989 in each of the last three years; and how many such acceptances followed evictions from (a) local authority, (b) housing association and (c) private rented accommodation. [14817]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Town and Country Planning

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations his Department has received about the (a) Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 and (b) Town and Country Planning (Demolition-Description of Buildings) Direction 1995. [15157]

Mr. Raynsford: We have received representations seeking amendments to both the General Permitted Development Order and the Demolition Direction so that a planning application can in future be required to demolish various types of sports facilities. The Government are concerned to prevent the unnecessary loss of sports facilities, particularly where there are no clear proposals for redevelopment, and we will review the need for amendments to the relevant legislation once the courts have reached their decision on Robert Coppen and others v. Edward Ram and another, 20 January 1997.

A449

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to improve the safety of the A449 between Worcester and Kidderminster. [15603]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Peter Luff, dated 13 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent question about plans to improve the safety of the A449 between Worcester and Kidderminster.

The Highways Agency is very concerned about the continuing accident problem on this section of the A449. Earlier this year we commissioned our agents, Hereford and Worcester County Council, to undertake a study to identify ways in which we could prevent specific types of accident and improve safety generally.

Their report should be available before the end of the year. As soon as the report is available, I will write to you again to inform you of its recommendations, our response to them and the next steps.

Right-to-roam Legislation

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how often and on what dates he has met representatives of a (a) the Countryside Commission, (b) English Nature, (c) English Heritage, (d) the Ramblers Association, (e) the Country Landowners Association and (f) the National Farmers Union when the Government's proposals on right-to-roam legislation were discussed. [15324]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not had any meetings with these organisations to discuss the Government's proposals on right-to-roam legislation. My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment discussed the Government's proposals with the Countryside Commission on 9 July and 30 October, with the Ramblers Association on 23 June and 12 September, and with the Country Landowners Association on 14 July. He and I discussed the proposals with the National Farmers Union on 22 July.

Climate Change

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the impact of climate change on (a) natural habitats and wildlife, (b) water resources and water management and (c) coastal and estuarial flooding and erosion; and if he will make a statement. [15591]

Angela Eagle: From time to time the Government receive representations on the impacts of climate change on a wide range of sectors.

The Government are concerned to understand better the potential impacts of climate change on all sectors. In this regard, they draw on the work of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and their own Climate Change Impacts Review Group. My Department has also established an office at the Environmental Change Unit at the University of Oxford to co-ordinate research on the impacts of climate change in the UK.

The Government are playing a key role in working for a successful international agreement on reducing greenhouse gas emissions at the forthcoming negotiations on climate change in Kyoto.

Pedestrian Fatalities

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) child and (b) total pedestrian fatalities there were in the United Kingdom and in each EU member state in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [15652]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is shown in the following table. It shows the improvement in child pedestrian fatalities in 1995 in the United Kingdom relative to other EU Member States. In 1995 the rate of child pedestrian fatalities per 100,000 population in United Kingdom was similar to that for all EU Member States.

Cycling

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources he is making available for the promotion and improvement of cycling facilities (a) nationally, (b) in Staffordshire and (c) in Stoke-on-Trent. [15643]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the current financial year a sum of £4 million has been allocated to the London Cycling Network; £79 million has also been allocated to local authorities outside London in 1997–98 for their integrated transport packages. Virtually all the packages include measures to promote cycling, but it is not possible to say how much local authorities will spend on cycling-related matters from their package allocations.

A total of £800,000 has been allocated to the North Staffordshire package in 1997–98. Staffordshire County Council has received £124,000 of this total and the City of Stoke-on-Trent £676,000.

The Department will continue to support these initiatives in future, as far as resources allow. It is not possible at this stage to predict the levels of funding that will be available in 1998–99 or in later years.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce orange badge parking permits for people temporarily disabled by accidents or operations. [15858]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have no plans to do so.

Mercury

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his letter of 8 October (MR/PSO/10894/97), what action is being taken in response to the call from Arctic countries for new international controls on mercury; and what progress is being made on a protocol concerning Long Range Transboundary Air Pollution. [14469]

Angela Eagle: There are already a range of measures in place to reduce emissions of mercury in the UK. Because of these and the fact that wider international action is required to deal with the problem, no specific UK response to the call from the Arctic countries is envisaged. The UK is, however, actively participating in the negotiations to develop a protocol under the UNECE's Convention on Long Range Transboundary Air Pollution to reduce European emissions of mercury and other heavy metals. Negotiations are at an advanced stage. It is expected that the protocol will be opened for signing at the Fourth Pan-European Conference of Environment Ministers on "Environment for Europe" in Aarhus, Denmark from 23 to 25 June 1998.

Regions White Paper

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the White Paper on the Regions. [15830]

Mr. Caborn: We are aiming to publish a White Paper on the English Regions within the next few weeks.

Household Growth

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is pursuing to reduce growth in the number of households in England and Wales. [15768]

Mr. Raynsford: Household growth reflects demographic factors, changes in age structure and deep-seated social trends. There is therefore little scope for the Government to influence the numbers even if they believed it was appropriate to do so.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received contesting his Department's projections for household growth set out in Command Paper 2901. [15770]

Mr. Raynsford: Command 2901, the last Administration's Housing White Paper, did not contain household projections. I assume that the question refers to my Department's document "Projections of Households in England to 2016", published in 1995. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to his hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton) on 3 November, Official Report, column 56.

Zoos

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to update the British zoo licensing system; and if he will make a statement. [16049]

Angela Eagle: British zoos have a deservedly high reputation for their progressive approach; the way in which their animals are kept and cared for; and the contribution they make to the conservation of endangered species through scientific research and captive breeding programmes. They have also played an important part in increasing public awareness of, and interest in, species conservation issues. It is now more than 10 years since the Zoo Licensing Act 1981 came into operation, and we believe it is time to update the system to reflect the changes in the role management of zoos which have taken place during this time, and to ensure that consistently high standards are maintained in all British zoos.

We have therefore undertaken a review of the Act. Having considered the views of a wide range of organisations concerned with zoos, we have concluded that the system is fundamentally sound and generally working well. However, we believe that there are some areas in which improvements can be made.

We propose to make a number of changes to modernise the system. The main elements are:

- a review of the Secretary of State's standards of modern zoo practice, with a view to encouraging greater efforts by zoos to promote conservation;
- closer monitoring of local authorities' performance and strengthened advice from central government to local councils and zoo operators;
- the establishment of a broadly-based Zoos Forum to oversee the zoo licensing system and advise Ministers. We propose that the Forum should comprise representatives of local authorities, voluntary bodies, and independent animal welfare and public safety experts;
- more flexible zoo inspection teams (though we believe that the requirement for teams to include a veterinary expert and one other inspector appointed by the Secretary of State should remain, and there would be no change to the frequency of inspections);
- tightening the inspection arrangements by encouraging local authorities to use their existing powers to undertake informal, unannounced inspections at least annually,
- supporting measures to improve the zoo standards throughout the European Community.

This is balanced package which will improve the level and consistency of standards throughout British zoos, strengthen their role in wildlife conservation, and reduce unnecessary bureaucracy. They will enable us to make a system which is already good even better, and by promoting greater openness and wider consultation, should help to increase public confidence in the zoo licensing system as a whole.

We now want to seek the views of those directly involved with or interested in zoos before finalising our package of improvements, and we have today issued a consultation paper setting out our proposals in more detail.

I would hope that all those with a concern for standards in our zoos will feel able to contribute, and we will certainly consider carefully all comments and proposals which we receive.

Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the House of Commons and House of Lords libraries.

Highway Code

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to consult appropriate organisations on the text of the draft revision of the Highway Code. [16170]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have today in accordance with section 38(3) of the Road Traffic Act 1988 sent copies of the draft revision of the Highway Code for consultation to representative organisations, requesting responses by 31 January 1988. We shall welcome constructive comments on the style and the content of the draft. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

New Housing

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has set targets for the proportion of new housing to be built on brown land within existing conurbations and settlements; and if he will make a statement. [15769]

Mr. Raynsford: The current target for England is for 50 per cent. of new housing to be built on previously used sites, most of which will be in existing settlements.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

E-mail

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Council pursuant to the answer of 10 November from the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Official Report, column 441, if she will list the e-mail addresses of herself and her senior officials. [15870]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Director of the Central Drugs Co-ordination Unit is able to receive e-mail at the following address: cdcu@gtnet.gov.uk. No other of my officials has an external e-mail facility, nor do I have one myself.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Environmental Audit Committee

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Council when she plans to move to establish an Environmental Audit Committee; and if she will make a statement. [15565]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I am pleased to inform the hon. Gentleman that this was moved on Monday 10 November.

In addition the Members were announced yesterday.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee pursuant to the answer of 10 November from the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Official Report, column 441, if he will arrange for all ministers' e-mail addresses to be included in the House of Commons telephone directory or made available to Right hon. and hon. Members in some other form. [15846]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The question of whether or not Ministers' e-mail addresses are made publicly available is not a matter for the Committee.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Dome

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, how much has been spent so far on (a) consultants and (b) advertisers in relation to the Millennium Dome at Greenwich; and if he will make a statement. [13278]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The New Millennium Experience Company has employed, and continues to employ, a range of consultants in a number of specialist fields appropriate to a project of this scale and nature, including engineering, planning and transport. In all cases the procedures adopted with such companies, including advertising agents, meet the requirements which apply to all non-departmental public bodies for the purchase of goods, services and equipment. Details of individual contracts are commercially confidential but the NMEC has been involved in 51 (completed and current) contracts with third parties to date.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will estimate how much has been spent on policing the Millennium Dome site in each month since the start of construction; what is the projected expenditure for the remaining months prior to completion; and if he will make a statement. [14235]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 7 November 1997]: In June 1997, and after open competition, the New Millennium Experience Company contracted with a local Greenwich company to provide security on the Millennium Experience site. The terms of the contract are commercial in confidence. The site security work has recently been the subject of a new competitive tender exercise following normal procedures for contract renewal. NMEC is now completing its consideration of the bids. English Partnerships have separate contract arrangements to fulfil their responsibilities for security to the whole peninsula site during the construction stage.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Railway Museum

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many locomotives at the National Railway Museum in York are still capable of running; and if he will encourage the exhibition of them in use. [15486]

Mr. Fisher: There are seven locomotives at the National Railway Museum in York still in full running order and two under repair, and twelve other locomotives from the national collection currently operating elsewhere. It is for the Trustees of the Museum to decide how best to display these engines, but it is their policy to retain a proportion of the National Railway Collection in full running order for public demonstration.

Opera and Ballet (London)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he made of the total number of performances in London by English National Opera, English National Ballet, the Royal Ballet and the Royal Opera before making his proposal that all these companies should share one venue. [15607]

Mr. Fisher: In the 1996–97 financial year the total number of performances in London by the English National Opera, English National Ballet, the Royal Ballet and the Royal Opera was as follows:

Company	Performances in London 1996–97
English National Opera	185
English National Ballet	62
Royal Opera	143
Royal Ballet	111

DEFENCE

Army Storage

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the rationalisation of the Army's storage estate. [16281]

Dr. Reid: Work has now been completed on a study, initiated by the previous Administration, on the potential for further rationalisation of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency's storage estate. The analysis has show that there are likely to be some increases in aspects of the Army storage task, for example some equipment and stores return from Bosnia, but the overall balance of factors, including the likely impact of the new Government's Strategic Defence Review, indicates that there will be significant reductions in ABSDA's future storage requirement. This reflects the need to drive down the overall size of the Army storage inventory to reflect changes in Defence planning assumptions and to reduce the costs of our storeholdings. Obtaining greater efficiency from Defence spending is a central part of the Strategic Defence Review. All support activities are being rigorously scrutinised against the benchmark of value for money and the need to ensure that we retain only those assets that are essential for Defence needs.

I have, therefore, decided to accept, as the basis for consultation with the Trades Unions and other interested parties, the recommendation that the ABSDA sub-depots at Thatcham in Berkshire, and Old Dalby in Leicestershire, should close. This would realise savings of some £35 million in net present value terms over a ten-year period. I also intend to suspend the ABSDA stores division CFQ study for the time being.

Final decisions will be taken in the light of representations made during the consultation period. A copy of the Consultation Document is being placed in the library of the House.

Pay and Pensions

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are being made for the future delivery of pay, pensions and personnel administration services for the armed forces. [16282]

Dr. Reid: My predecessor announced on 20 February this year, Official Report, column 720 that the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency was to be launched as a tri-Service organisation on 1 April, and that plans were in hand to appoint a commercial partner to deliver most of the Agency's services on its behalf. AFPAA was launched on the due date, and the necessary evaluation and approval processes for its partnering contract have now been completed. I have agreed that the contract should be awarded to Electronic Data Systems (Defence) Ltd.

As part of the modernisation of our Armed Forces for the 21st Century, this public-private partnering contract is the beginning of a comprehensive programme of improvement and redevelopment in the delivery of pay, pensions and personnel administrative services. It will bring new skills and technology to this area of work, and, importantly, it will provide the necessary capital, under private finance arrangements, at a level which could not be expected from the Defence budget. The contract will run for up to 12 years at an estimated cost of over £30 million. The effective date for transfer of responsibility to EDS, including staff and capital assets, is planned for 1 January next year. About 900 civilian staff will move permanently to EDS, with 100 military personnel being placed with the company in the first instance.

In about three years' time, elements of the Army Personnel Centre in Glasgow will come under AFPAA's responsibility. This will mean the transfer of a further 500 civilian staff to EDS. There are no plans to relocate these jobs from Glasgow and any proposals would need Ministerial approval.

Contingency and Operational Procurement Exhibition

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if his Department plans to send inspectors to COPEX events which are eligible for Government joint venture support; [14369]

(2) if he will list the visits to the visits to the 1997 Contingency and Operational Procurement Exhibition by Ministry of Defence inspectors; and what criteria were used to assess the types of equipment and services. [14368]

Mr. Spellar: Because COPEX 1997 was held on Ministry of Defence land, two MOD inspectors visited the exhibiton while it was being set up and during the first open day to assess the suitability for export of the equipment and services on offer. The criteria used were those announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29.

The MOD plays no part in the organisation of COPEX exhibitions and has no plans at the present time to send inspectors to future COPEX events.

Military Exhibitions

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the support provided by his Department and DESO to private military, security and police exhibitions in the last year. [14364]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence has provided the following support for defence equipment exhibitions organised by private companies during the past year, all of which attracted host Government support:

Exhibition	Dates	Type of support
IMDEX Asia 97, Singapore	6 to 9 May 1997	Attended by the Military Deputy to the Head of Defence Export Services. HM Ships Richmond and Illustrious also visited, and DESO had its own exhibition stand.
Paris Air Show	10 to 18 June 1997	Attended by the Minister of State for Defence Procurement, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence, the Chief of Defence Procurement, and the Head of Defence Export Services. DESO also had its own exhibition stand.

Exhibition	Dates	Type of support
IDEF 97, Turkey	23 to 26 September 1997	Attended by the Head of Defence Export Services. DESO also had its own exhibition stand.
IMDEX 97, Greenwich	7 to 10 October 1997	Opened by the First Sea Lord and Chief of the Naval Staff. Keynote address given by the Chief of Defence Procurement. HMS Lancaster also visited.

Discrimination

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the list of names of employers who have been found to have breached the anti-discrimination legislation at an industrial tribunal and the amount of compensation awarded. [15014]

Dr. Reid: Figures for industrial tribunal applications are held centrally only for those brought by members of the Armed Forces. Figures for cases brought by civilian employees of the Department are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

All cases brought before an industrial tribunal name the Ministry of Defence as the main respondent but separate figures for each of the Armed forces can be identified. The cost of awards made by industrial tribunals against the Armed Forces for discrimination, excluding those made to women who received compensation arising out of their unlawful dismissal on grounds of pregnancy, are as follows:

Royal Navy	65,000
Army	Nil
Royal Air Force	10,000

In addition, the Ministry of Defence has settled a number of claims either prior to or during industrial tribunal hearings as follows:

Royal Navy	191,000
Army	777,300
Royal Air Force	31,944

In the case of those women unlawfully dismissed from the Services on grounds of pregnancy the average award was £11,445. The overall figures were as follows:

Royal Navy	13,898,746.38
Army	21,760,119.65
Royal Air Force	21,612,724.84

Organophosphates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will place in the Library the background note that accompanied the draft answer to the question by the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent, 11 July, Official Report, column 436, on organophosphate pesticide use; [14764]

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the fax dated 18 July 1994, sent by the Department of Entomology at the Royal Medical College, London to the Department of Health concerning insecticides used in the Gulf war cited in his Department's recent memorandum relating to provision of advice to Ministers between 1994 and 1996 on organophsphate pesticide use during the Gulf War. [14708]

Dr. Reid: No. The information contained within these documents is advice to Ministers and as such is covered by exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. On an exceptional basis, the information from these documents relating to organophosphate pesticides has already been made available in the Further Memorandum on the provision of advice to Ministers on the use of OP pesticides during the Gulf War, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Offset Exhibition

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance the Ministry of Defence and its agencies gave to the organisers of the Offset exhibition at the North Wales Centre, Aberconwy; and what was the cost to public funds. [15295]

Mr. Spellar: Officials attended this exhibition in the course of their normal duties, but the Ministry of Defence gave no financial support to the organisers.

Defence Exports (Ethical Code)

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many defence companies have sought his Department's assistance over the Government's ethical code on defence exports. [15543]

Mr. Spellar: As part of their normal daily business, officials in the Defence Export Services Organisation provide advice to defence companies on the criteria used by the Government in considering licence applications for the export of conventional arms. It is not practical to identify every company that has sought this advice.

Information Warfare

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the defence budget in (a) cash and (b) percentage terms is allocated to information warfare. [15335]

Dr. Reid: Information warfare is a broad term which covers all aspects of the security of information and communications systems from front line weapons to office IT equipment. Measures to counter information warfare are integral features of most systems and it is not therefore possible to identify their costs separately.

Non-lethal Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce non-lethal disabling weapons for peacekeeping and battlefield use. [14415]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 7 November 1997]: Research is conducted into non-lethal weapon technologies to assess technical options to meet endorsed military capability requirements, but we have no present plans for the procurement of further NLWs.

Eurofighter

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's estimate of the cost of the Eurofighter programme to the United Kingdom and to the participating states as a whole; and how many aircraft are due to be ordered by (a) the United Kingdom and (b) participating states. [14679]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 10 November 1997]: The latest estimated procurement cost of the Eurofighter programme is £42.8 billion, £15.9 billion of which is the estimated cost to the UK. The participating nations have declared a total requirement for 620 Eurofighter aircraft, 232 of which are for the UK.

US Defence Trade Report

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the medium-term implications of US Commerce Department report "Offsets in Defense Trade 1997". [15294]

Mr. Spellar: The US Department of Commerce report "Offsets in Defense Trade 1997" is still under consideration by the Ministry of Defence. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list (a) the nature and value of contracts his office has entered into and (b) discussions Ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14944]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 7 November 1997]: For this purpose my Department is the Cabinet Office. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 11 November 1997, Official Report, columns 463–64.

Fair Trade (Coffee and Tea)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the oral Statement by the Secretary of State for International Development, Official Report, 5 November, column 332, if he will instruct officials to serve coffee and tea furnished by suppliers who adhere to fair trade standards in his Office. [15487]

The Prime Minister: No. Individual Government Departments are responsible for taking decisions on the goods and services they acquire, taking into account the Government's policy of seeking value for money for the benefit of the taxpayer. However, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development has made clear, the Government are also committed to promoting and supporting ethical trading wherever possible.

Anglo-French Summit

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total cost, including incidental expenses, of preparing and furnishing the rooms in Canary Wharf used for the Anglo-French Summit; and if he will break this down into the main items of expenditure. [15658]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 November 1997]: Canary Wharf was provided for the Summit free of charge. Final figures for the cost of other items are not yet available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department has collated on the number of live animals exported since 1 May; and if he will make a statement. [13964]

Mr. Rooker: The most up-to-date information available to the Department is recorded on the Animal Movement electronic data system. From May to October 1997 inclusive, approximately 263,00 sheep/goats and 93,900 pigs were exported from Great Britain to other EU Member States. This information is provisional and subject to change. There was a significant increase in the number of sheep exported from August to October. This is consistent with normal trade patterns.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many live sheep were exported in each of the five years up to 1997; how many have been exported so far this year; what was their final destination; and if he will make a statement. [13968]

Mr. Rooker: Official Overseas Trade Statistics show that the following number of sheep were exported from the United Kingdom:

	Number
1992	1,422,000
1993	830,000
1994	989,000
1995	756,000
1996	547,000
January–July 1997	53,000

These figures are provisional and subject to amendment. Certified destinations were principally France, the Netherlands, Belgium, Germany and the Republic of Ireland.

Fair Trade (Coffee and Tea)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the oral statement by the Secretary of State for International Development, Official Report, 5 November, column 332, if he will instruct officials to serve coffee and tea furnished by suppliers who adhere to fair trade standards in his Department. [15502]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which the Prime Minister has given today. All procurement decisions in the Department are based on the Government's policy of value for money.

Rothamsted Experimental Station

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to continue the long-term experiments at Rothamsted Experimental station. [15854]

Mr. Rooker: Rothamsted is one of the three research sites making up the Institute of Arable Crops Research. MAFF is a major customer for research at IACR and will spend over £7 million in the current year. Rothamsted runs several long-term experiments, some of which have contributed information to the main MAFF research programmes at the site dealing with nutrient loss, soil organic matter and biodiversity. However, this core long-term work is funded by BBSRC and other funders and is not the direct responsibility of MAFF.

Farmland Birds

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his letter of 8 October concerning the agri-environment programme and farmland birds (108634), when he expects to respond to the three-year BTO project interim report. [14468]

Mr. Rooker: I expect to respond when final results of the British Trust for Ornithology project, due in October 1998, are available and have been assessed.

Meanwhile, steps taken to help reserve the decline in farmland birds were outlined by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on 27 October, Official Report, column 715.

Cattle Slaughter Scheme

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his plans for the incineration of meat and bone meal produced from the cull of animals under the over 30-months-scheme. [15766]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are considering a number of options for the disposal of meat and bone meal arising from the over 30-months-scheme. Revelant elements of the Intervention Board's on-going tender exercise have been suspended to allow time for reflection on the full range of options presenting themselves. While some MBM is being burnt in a high temperature waste incinerator at Fawley, no decision has yet been taken on any other disposal option, or options, for the stored material, including burning MBM for energy recovery in power stations. In reaching a decision, full weight will be given to the protection of human health and the environment.

WALES

Military Exports

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has met representatives of Welsh business to explain the Government's policy on the sale and supply of military, security and police equipment to oppressive regimes. [15298]

Mr. Hain: No. I refer my hon. Friend to the statement given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29, which sets out the Government's policy on this subject.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the significance to the Welsh economy of the manufacture, sale and supply of military, security and police equipment; and if he will place a copy of his assessment in the Library. [15292]

Mr. Hain: The Department of Trade and Industry has been studying the value of the defence industry to the UK but its emphasis has been national and has not included production of detailed figures on a regional basis.

A copy of "The Study of the Value of the Defence Industry to the UK Economy" of December 1995 was placed in the Library of the House.

US Defence Trade Report

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the medium-term implications of US Commerce Department report, "Offsets in Defence Trade 1997". [15293]

Mr. Hain: The US Department of Commerce report "Offsets in Defence Trade 1997" is under consideration by the Ministry of Defence.

Cycling

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to encourage the use of bicycles as an alternative to cars in Welsh cities and towns; and if he will make a statement. [15304]

Mr. Hain: The Government are considering the role of cycling, alongside that of all transport modes, as part of their development of an integrated transport policy to be set out in a White Paper next year. I intend to publish a Welsh Transport Policy Statement at around the same time.

I have already taken one practical step to give local authorities more scope to promote cycling through the changes to the Welsh Transport Grant regime which I announced in June. These will allow support to be given in future to "integrated transport packages" which can, among other things, include measures to promote cycling.

TREASURY

Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate in cash terms in 1995–96 prices the changes for 1997–98 and 1998–99 in NHS expenditure between (a) the 1996 budget plans and (b) the Government's latest plans. [13189]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 October 1997]: In the July Budget an additional £1.2 billion was allocated for the NHS in 1998–99, and on 14 October a further package of £300 million was announced for patient care in 1997–98. These figures can be converted into 1995–96 prices using the current forecasts for the GDP deflator which are 2.76 per cent. for 1996–97, 2.75 per cent. for 1997–98 and 2.75 per cent. for 1998–99.

Income Tax

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on the number of people of working age who face combined marginal rates of withdrawal of tax, national insurance contributions and means-tested benefits of (a) under 50 per cent., (b) 50–59 per cent., (c) 60–69 per cent., (d) 70–79 per cent., (e) 80–89 per cent. and (f) 90 per cent. or above of introducing a 10p starting rate of income tax on (i) the first £1,000, (ii) the first £1,500 or (iii) the first £2,000 of taxable income. [14016]

Dawn Primarolo: The effect of introducing a 10p tax rate on marginal deduction rates, and on disposable income, would depend on what other changes were made to the tax and benefit system at the time of its introduction.

Cash Limits

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Departments overspent their allocated budget in financial year 1996–97; by how much each overspent its allocated budget; which Departments have had to reduce their budgets in financial year 1997–98 as a consequence; which Departments were allowed a claim on the reserve for all or part of their overspend; and how much each Department was allowed to claim from the reserve. [14026]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 3 November 1997]: The Ministry of Defence breached its overall cash limit for 1996–97 by £246 million. It was the only Department to do so. No claim on the Reserve was agreed in respect of the overspend in 1996–97, but the overspend did increase the control total outturn for 1996–97. Following an investigation into the causes of the breach it was decided that the Ministry of Defence should reduce its overall cash limit for 1997–98 by £168 million.

The reduction in 1997–98 is less than the overspend for two reasons. The first is that the Ministry of Defence received £40 million of extra receipts in 1996–97 which could not be appropriated in aid of the Ministry's Votes, because no provision had been made for them in the Estimates presented to Parliament. These receipts had to be surrendered by the Ministry directly to the Consolidated Fund, and so they could not be included in calculating the Ministry's overspend against the cash limit on its votes. Allowance was made for this in determining the size of the reduction in the cash limit in 1997–98. Secondly, allowance was also made for certain technical adjustments made during the course of 1996–97 in connection with the sale of the married quarters estate. These amounted to £38 million.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish the action plan, due by 1 October 1997, for resolving the computer millennium problem in his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible; if such was fully completed on time; and if he will make a statement; [13562]

(2) what is his latest estimate of the total cost of resolving the computer millennium problem in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) other public bodies for which he is responsible; if he will state in each case (i) expenditure incurred to date, (ii) expenditure planned for 1997–98, (iii) expenditure planned for 1998–99 and (iv) expenditure planned for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [13563]

Mr. Liddell [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The majority of my Departments and agencies have submitted their costed plans to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency on schedule. Those that have not will be doing so shortly.

The plans will be analysed by the Central Information Technology Unit and the CCTA and the conclusions reported to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who will then inform Parliament. The Plans will be exempted from disclosure under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which permits non-disclosure prior to an announcement. However, once the announcement has been made the plans will be available to the public.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when his Department, its agencies and other public bodies for which he is responsible completed the millennium computer compliance audits of systems; and if he will make a statement. [13565]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 4 November 1997]: Year 2000 system audits and inventories were completed by my departments and agencies as follows:

	Date
Treasury	September 1996
Inland Revenue	November 1996 (January 1997 for Valuation Office agency)
Customs and Excise	December 1996
Royal Mint[1]	September 1997
National Savings	July 1997
Office for National Statistics	September 1997

[1] Systems are regularly reviewed. Date given is for last review.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which (a) Minister and (b) civil servant has overall responsibility for ensuring millennium computer compliance in his Department and its associated public bodies. [13566]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 4 November 1997]: In view of the importance we are giving to the Year 2000 issue, I will be taking overall responsibility for ensuring that my departments' and agencies' IT systems are compliant. At official level, those with overall responsibility are as follows:

	Responsibility
Treasury	Head of IT services
Inland Revenue[1]	Deputy Director for the Business and Management Services division
Customs and Excise	Head of Corporate Development group
Royal Mint	Head of IT
National Savings	Director of Operations
Office for National Statistics	Director of Survey and Statistical Services division

[1] Includes Valuation Office.

Departmental Savings

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy for 1997–98 and 1998–99 that savings achieved in one Department can be switched to another Department; and if he will make a statement. [13645]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 5 November 1997]: The Government are committed to holding to the Control Totals for 1997–98 and 1998–99. Within that it may be appropriate on occasions to find savings from one

Department to cover increases in another as was done with the NHS this year. Minor transfers will continue in the normal course of business—for example, to meet the costs of new policy initiatives which fall outside the originating Department.

National Health Service

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to make further allocations of expenditure to the National Health Service in 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [13292]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 6 November 1997]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has no plans to make further allocations of expenditure to the National Health Service in 1997–98. An extra £300 million for patient care this winter was announced on 14 October 1997, which has been made available by a reallocation of £270 million from other Department's budgets, plus £30 million in new administrative savings identified within the NHS in England.

Departmental Spending Totals

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy that the existing departmental spending totals for 1998–99 will be adhered to; what is his policy on the transfer of expenditure savings from one Department to another for 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [13286]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 6 November 1997]: The Government are committed to holding to the Control Total for 1998–99. Departments known their baselines for 1998–99 and are planning spending accordingly. There are no current plans to reallocate spending between Departments but it may be appropriate on occasion to find savings from one Department to cover increases in another as was done with the NHS this year. Minor transfers will continue in the normal course of business—for example, to meet the cost of new policy initiatives which fall outside the originating Departments.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional annual revenue which would accrue to the Treasury if the inheritance tax threshold was returned to the former rate of £150,000. [14704]

Dawn Primarolo: The full-year effect in 1997–98 of lowering the inheritance tax threshold from £215,000 to £150,00 is estimated to be an increase of £575 million in inheritance tax liability.

Casinos

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what differences in taxation methods apply between bets placed in (a) casinos and (b) betting shops; and if he will make a statement. [14911]

Dawn Primarolo: The gross gaming yield duty of a casino is liable to gaming duty. The gross gaming yield consists of the total value of stakes, minus players' winnings, on games in which the house is banker and participation charges on games in which the bank is shared by players.

Gaming duty is a tiered duty which ranges from 2½ per cent. to 33⅓ per cent. It is charged on each set of premises at which dutiable gaming takes place. The present charging structure for each set of premises is shown below.

Part of gross gaming yield	Rate (per cent.)
The first £450,000	2½
The next £2,250,000	12½
The next £2,700,000	25
The remainder	33⅓

Bets placed with a bookmaker in a betting shop are liable to general betting duty. Duty is due on the total amount staked by betters on all off-course bets. The rate of general betting duty is currently 6¾ per cent.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the system of taxation of casinos. [14912]

Dawn Primarolo: Gaming duty replaced gaming licence duty on 1 October 1997. A post-implementation review will be conducted after 12 months to evaluate the impact of the changes.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current licence fee paid by casinos; and if he will make a statement. [14913]

Dawn Primarolo: The requirement for a revenue gaming licence for casinos was removed when gaming duty replaced gaming licence duty on 1 October 1997.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was, in each of the last three years (a) the total amount taken by the casino industry across gaming tables and (b) the total amount paid by the casino industry by way of gaming licence duty in (i) Greater London and (ii) the United Kingdom excluding Greater London. [14914]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs do not record gaming licence duty receipts in a manner which allows for regional analysis. The annual receipts for the last three years are shown below.

Gaming licence duty receipts

(£'000s)

	Number
1994–95	72,263
1995–96	84,087
1996–97	79,407

Unemployment

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of people becoming unemployed cease to be unemployed within a year (a) in total and (b) broken down into (i) under-25s, (ii) those aged 25 to 44 and (iii) those over 44 years. [14939]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Willetts, dated 13 November 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent question on the proportion of people who become unemployed that cease to be unemployed within one year, broken down by age groups.

The ONS measure of unemployment, derived from the quarterly Labour Force Survey, is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed people who are: a) without a paid job; b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

ONS also publishes the monthly claimant court, which is based on the administrative system which records all people claiming unemployment-related benefits (i.e. Jobseekers Allowance or National Insurance credits) at Employment Service offices on the day of the monthly count, who on that day had signed on as unemployed and available to do any suitable work.

The information requested can only be derived from the claimant count, as the Labour Force Survey is unable to track individuals over time. The results are shown in the attached table.

Proportion of joiners to the claimant count in the 12 months to October 1996 who left the count within 12 months, by age

Age of claimant at start of claim	Proportion of joiners that left within 12 months Per cent.
Under 25	90.5
25 to 44	87.3
Over 44	86.8
All ages	88.4

Fair Trade (Coffee and Tea)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral Statement by the Secretary of State for International Development, Official Report, 5 November, column 332, if he will instruct officials to serve coffee and tea furnished by suppliers who adhere to fair trade standards in his Department. [15499]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I refer to the answer which the Prime Minister has given today. All procurement decisions in the Treasury are based on the Government's policy of value for money.

VAT (Energy-saving Materials)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Treasury review on reducing VAT on energy-saving materials will be published. [15620]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs have completed their review and are now preparing their report.

Exchange Rates

Dr. Fox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measurements of currency of invoice he makes in assessing the short-run impact of exchange rates changes on the economy; and if he will publish the data for the last five years. [15457]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 11 November 1997]: Publication of regular data on currency of invoice ceased in 1988. Data for 1984–88 were provided to the hon. Member on 4 November 1997, Official Report, columns 101-02 in response to previous questions and the available evidence suggests that use of foreign currency is fairly stable over time.

These data are used to inform the Treasury's assessment of the short-run impact of exchange rate changes on the economy.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements he has made for receiving observations on the document "UK Membership of the Single Currency: An Assessment of the Five Economic Tests"; and if he will publish a document containing the comments and conclusions of her Majesty's Government to any material received by them in relation to potential advantages and disadvantages of economic and monetary union. [15747]

Mrs. Liddell: Observations on the document in question can be addressed to Treasury Ministers. The Treasury has already published a report on the pros and cons of EMU by David Currie. There are no plans to publish a further document containing comments and conclusions on that report or on the assessment of the five economic tests. The Chancellor has said that a period of preparation is needed now, to address the practical steps that government and business will need to take before a final decision to join the single currency.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trent Engine

Mr. Laxton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made on Rolls-Royce's application for launch aid for the new Trent engine. [16392]

Mr. Battle: I am pleased to announce that the Government have agreed to provide a long-term investment of up to £200 million over the next four years to Rolls-Royce plc. towards the design and development of its important new range of Trent engines. This will extend the Trent family to enable it to power all the world's new large aircraft. For example, the Trent 500 has been selected by Airbus Industrie as the powerplant for the new A340-500/600, in a privileged partnership announced at the Paris Air Show in June 1997.

The Government's support reflects the importance of this project to the UK economy and the clearly established need for public funds to enable it to go ahead. The agreement with Rolls-Royce embodies the Government's commitment to public–private partnerships and is a marked departure from the previous administration's approach to the civil aviation industry.

The investment is genuinely commercial, and reflects the risk that the taxpayer has been asked to share. The Government and Rolls-Royce will share, as partners, in the future rewards from this engine programme. The Government intend that this approach will inform the consideration of any future applications for support from the civil aviation industry.

Rolls-Royce is the 10th largest UK investor in research and development and much of its technology is diffused to other sectors of the Uk economy. The Trent engine has already demonstrated its technical excellence and these new developments will help to ensure that Rolls-Royce remains a world leader in aero-engine technology and continues to provide a centre of excellence in the United Kingdom. Success in this new Trent range will bring wider benefits to the many companies which supply Rolls-Royce, and increase competition for worldwide sales of aero-engines to the advantage of UK airlines and airline passengers.

My Department will be discussing this investment with the European Commission.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if Government Departments have now reported on their preparedness for the year 2000 problem; and when the results will be published. [14994]

Mr. David Clark: I have been asked to reply.

Within Government itself, Departments and Agencies are responsible for their own systems. The Central Information Technology Unit, through its agent the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency supports the public sector. As part of that support CITU and CCTA have identified a programme of action to ensure that Government's response to the year 2000 problem is co-ordinated and coherent. This involves each Government Department providing me with detailed and costed plans for dealing with the year 2000 date change problem as soon as possible after 1 October 1997.

I am awaiting an analysis and report on these plans from the CITU and the CCTA so that I can form an overall picture of progress, costs and future plans. Once I have done so I will inform Parliament.

US Defence Trade Report

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the medium-term implications of US Commerce Department report "Offsets in Defence Trade 1997". [15290]

Mr. Spellar: I have been asked to reply as responsibility for the subject matter falls to the Ministry of Defence.

The US Department of Commerce report "Offsets in Defence Trade 1997" is still under consideration by the Ministry of Defence. I will write to my hon. Friend in due course.

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the expenditure by (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if she will make a statement. [13263]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 5 November 1997]: Expenditure on external tax advice is undertaken in accordance with Treasury guidance. Information relating to expenditure on specific external advice is not held centrally and can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Chief Executives of the Department's Executive Agencies have been asked to respond separately.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 13 November 1997:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about expenditure on tax consultants and other external tax advice.

This Agency has not made any use of such consultants during the years in question and our expenditure has therefore been nil.

Letter from Ian Jones to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 13 November 1997:

You tabled a Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade, for named day reply on 5 November, about expenditure by her Department, its agencies and non departmental bodies on tax consultants and other external tax advice. I have been asked to reply in respect of the Employment Tribunals Service.

The Employment Tribunals Service has not incurred any expenditure in either of the areas you asked about.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 13 November 1997:

I am replying for the Patent Office to your Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade about the cost of tax consultants and external tax advice.

The Patent Office has made no payments in this respect in 1995/96, 1996/97 and 1997/98 to date. No such transactions are expected in the remainder of 1997/98.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 13 November 1997:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about expenditure by The Insolvency Service on tax consultants and other external advice in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98.

Its expenditure has been as follows:

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Tax Consultants	Nil	Nil	Nil
External tax advice	Nil	£800	Nil

Letter from John Holden to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 13 November 1997:

I have been asked to reply to your question to the President of the Board of Trade concerning i) tax consultants and ii) tax advice and comment as follows:

(i) Companies House has expended the following amounts on tax consultants:

1995–96: £282

1996–97: £141

1997–98: Nil

ii) No other external tax advice has been engaged.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 13 November 1997:

Mrs. Roche, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Small Firms, Trade and Industry, has asked me to reply on behalf of the Radiocommunications Agency to your Question about Agency expenditure on tax consultants and other external tax advice.

The Agency has been advised on PAYE matters by Fraser Russell during the relevant period and the actual and estimated expenditure details are as follows:

(1) 1995–96: £3,150.00

(2) 1996–97: £2,800.00

(3) 1997–98: £2,852.00 (estimated).

All figures exclude VAT, which is recoverable by the Agency.

Investment (Multilateral Agreement)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in pressing for the Multilateral Agreement on Investment to include a legal requirement for parties not to lower environmental or labour standards in order to attract foreign investment. [15474]

Mrs. Roche: Draft text on this issue has been discussed at the negotiations of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment in Paris. The UK is at the forefront of widespread but not universal support for such a legal requirement. We will continue to press the case up to the conclusion of the negotiations in April 1998.

Animal Testing (Product Labelling)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to make the use of animal testing a criterion for product labelling; and if she will make a statement. [13688]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The only animal testing issues for which my Department is responsible arise from regulations governing the supply of cosmetic products. This legislation, the Cosmetic Products (Safety) Regulations 1996, requires that where claims are made about the animal testing status of cosmetic products they should state clearly whether the tests carried out involved the product itself or its ingredients.

The Cosmetics Directive (76/768/EEC), which the Regulations implement, is unsatisfactory in its treatment of animal testing issues. In particular, the ban on using ingredients which have been tested on animals (currently deferred until 30 June 2000) does not in any case apply to finished products which may have been tested on animals. I intend to press the Commission to bring forward proposals to amend the Directive and would expect other related issues, such as compulsory labelling of animal testing, to be raised by animal welfare groups at the same time. I shall, of course, consult the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection and other interested parties.

Defence Exports

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the number of export licences refused in respect of defence exports in each of the years 1979 to 1996. [15181]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 10 November 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to my letter of 3 September to the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber) pursuant to my answer to him of 31 July, Official Report, column 627. A copy of that letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

This answer should be read in the context of my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Nuclear Safety (Former Soviet Union)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the safeguards training assistance currently being conducted by British Nuclear Fuels in the former Soviet Union. [14716]

Mr. Battle: My Department has in recent years funded a range of collaborative activities designed to help improve nuclear safeguards and nuclear materials accountancy and control arrangements in the former Soviet Union. Details have been provided in papers presented at a number of international safeguards symposia, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Work involving safeguards experts from BNFL and their counterparts from the Mayak reprocessing plant in Russia has been a particularly important aspect of these activities. This has yielded improvements in nuclear materials accountancy practices at Mayak and also recommendations on further work necessary to bring these practices into line with those at more modern reprocessing plants. The substantial funding necessary to implement fully the recommended programme of nuclear materials accountancy improvements at Mayak is being sought from the European Union's TACIS programme.

China

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the current level of trade between Britain and China. [14692]

Mrs. Roche: The latest information on the level of trade between the UK and China is given in the table.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of claims for disability living allowance have been (a) refused and (b) granted after appeal in each month since April 1996 in (i) Great Britain and (ii) each region. [14737]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 November 1997]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Disability Living Allowance statistics do not distinguish between reviews and appeals relating to first claims, and reviews and appeals relating to existing awards. A claim may be successful on review or appeal for a variety of reasons, for example because additional information has been received or the claimant's condition has deteriorated.

Lone Parents

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the timetable for extending the Government's new deal for lone parents to the west midlands. [15478]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Phase 1 of the New Deal for Lone Parents is already available in parts of the West Midlands, offering a comprehensive package of back-to-work help for lone parents—including advice with jobsearch, training, childcare and benefits. In the West Midlands the New Deal for Lone Parents is available in Atherstone, Bedworth, Halesowen, Dudley, Kenilworth, Kidderminister, Leamington Spa, Nuneaton, Rugby, Stourbridge, Stourport on Severn and Stratford on Avon.

The New Deal for Lone Parents will be extended to all remaining parts of the West Midlands when it is rolled out across the country from October 1998.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what investment is being made to ensure that there are satisfactory levels of child care support under the new deal for lone parents. [15479]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government recognise the importance of good quality affordable child care for all working parents, particularly for lone parents who have to cope with bringing up children alone. That is why, when we launched the New Deal for Lone Parents in July this year, additional funds were made available to meet the child care expenses of lone parents who are undertaking jobsearch activities.

New Deal advisers can offer up to £60 per week to each lone parent to help them pay for child care while they attend job interviews or training. New Deal advisers also have access to information on local child care services so that they can help lone parents find the most suitable child care for their children while they are at work.

The first phase of the Government's New Deal for Lone Parents, operating in eight areas, has allocated £314,000 for child care during jobsearch in the current financial year 1997–98. Half of this sum has been put aside for these items for the remainder of the first phase, from 1 April to 30 September 1998. For the national programme, estimated costs being used for planning purposes are in the region of £2.5 million for child care during jobsearch for 1998–99, with increased sums for following years. In addition a further £50 million during the lifetime of the Parliament will be set aside to extend help with child care costs through the in-work benefits.

Lone parents in phase one of the New Deal for Lone Parents—including in the West Midlands—are already benefiting from this measure.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will calculate what the standard rate for mortgage interest payments for people on benefits would be on the basis of including bank mortgage rates equally with main building society rates. [15078]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The standard rate for mortgage interest payments for people on benefits would currently be 7.66 per cent. if bank rates had been included equally with the main building society rates.

Note:

The revised Financial Statistics Table 7.1L gives the composite building society and bank rate produced by the Building Societies Commission and the Bank of England. The rate of 7.66 per cent. is for the same point in time as the current Standard Interest Rate (7.57 per cent.).

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if former building societies are included in the weighted average basic rates for calculating the standard rate for mortgage interest payments for people on benefits; and if she will make a statement. [15079]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The standard rate for mortgage interest payments for people on benefits does not take account of basic mortgage rates of the Halifax or Alliance and Leicester, but currently does take account of basic mortgage rates of the Woolwich and Northern Rock.

Pensions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the planned timetable for the development of stakeholder pensions. [15480]

Mr. Denham: We will be making an announcement about the publication of a consultation document on Stakeholder Pensions shortly.

Following consultation we plan to publish more detailed proposals for Stakeholder Pensions alongside our proposals for the long-term framework for pension reform, in the first half of 1998.

War Pensions

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate what the level of all earnings disregards under income support, family credit and housing benefit would be had they been uprated in line with earnings since 1988. [12779]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

Fair Trade (Coffee and Tea)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the oral Statement by the Secretary State for International Development, Official Report, 5 November, column 332, if she will instruct officials to serve coffee and tea furnished by suppliers who adhere to fair trade standards in her Department. [15498]

Mr. Field: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer the Prime Minister has given today. All procurement decisions in this Department are based on the Government's policy of value for money.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Tax Advice

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of his Deparmtent on the purchase of tax avoidance advice; and if he will make a statement. [13260]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 5 November 1997]: A non-departmental public body sponsored by this Department sought external advice in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 to enable it to comply with its statutory tax obligations. This Department has in 1997–98 sought limited external advice on issues arising under another country's tax laws. In neither case was this advice sought for tax avoidance purposes.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, on (i) tax consultants and (ii) other external tax advice in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [13259]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 5 November 1997]: Spending by this Department, its executive agency, and non-departmental public bodies on tax consultants and other external tax advice was as follows:

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the resolution to be considered by the First Committee of the UN General Assembly on the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legality of the threat or use of nuclear weapons. [14721]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are committed to the goal of nuclear disarmament and continue to hold the International Court of Justice in high regard. We have said that we will press for multilateral negotiations towards mutual, balanced and verifiable reductions in nuclear weapons and, when satisfied with progress, will ensure that British nuclear weapons are included in multilateral negotiations. We will, however, vote against the resolution because of its selective quotation of the International Court of Justice's Advisory Opinion on the threat or use of nuclear weapons, and its unrealistic call for time-bound multilateral negotiations.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) his Department's policies and initiatives designed to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and (b) the departmental policies and initiatives designed to reduce other greenhouse gases; if he will estimate for each the annual reduction in tonnage of greenhouse gas emissions achieved in the most recent year for which figures are available compared to those for 1990; and what estimate he has made of further reductions, or increases, predicted for 2000 and 2010, assuming continuation of current policies. [15543]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the United Kingdom's Second Report under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change which was published in February 1997. It reports the UK's progress in implementing its programme for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and gives a projection of what the programme is expected to deliver by 2000. The report projects forward what the current programme is expected to achieve to 2020.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Belarus

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the support the United Kingdom is giving to the Republic of Belarus in respect of the effects of the Chernobyl disaster on Belarussian children. [15824]

Clare Short: The Untied Kingdom is providing support through the European Commission and other international agencies such as the World Health Organisation for a range of programmes in Belarus designed to ameliorate the effects of the Chernobyl disaster. We have previously provided support directly through our own Environmental Know How Fund for post-Chernobyl programmes, including food screening for radioactive contamination.

Southern Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will extend short-term emergency aid to the people of the Western Equatorial region in Southern Sudan; and if she will make a statement. [14830]

Clare Short: We are ready to consider proposals put to us to help alleviate the suffering of victims of short-time emergencies in the Western Equatorial region in Southern Sudan. We have already supported three non-governmental Organisation projects in the region this year.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Gender Awareness Training (Judiciary)

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will establish gender awareness training for all the judiciary. [15022]

Mr. Hoon: Judicial training is the responsibility of the Judicial Studies Board (JSB), which is a non-departmental governmental body. It has held a number of sessions in both induction and continuation training on equal treatment, including gender awareness, and is considering how training in this area might be developed.

Lay Magistrate training is delivered by Magistrates' Courts' Committees but the JSB has a role is setting the syllabus. Lay Magistrates already address the issue of equal treatment for all in the light of their judicial oath and the JSB has recently begun a study to identify the skills and knowledge required by Lay Magistrates to ensure equality of treatment for all who appear in their courts.

Fair Trade (Coffee and Tea)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to the oral Statement by the Secretary of State for International Development, Official Report, 5 November, column 332, if he will instruct officials to serve coffee and tea furnished by suppliers who adhere to fair trade standards in his Department. [15494]

Mr. Hoon: I refer to the answer which the Prime Minister has given today. All procurement decisions in my Department are based on the Government's policy of value for money.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the Annual Report and Accounts for the Prison Service. [16411]

Mr. Straw: I am pleased to report that I have today published the Prison Service Report and Accounts for 1996–97, along with those for 1995–96. Copies have been placed in the Library.

In future, we will aim to publish Prison Service Annual Reports and Accounts within six months of the end of the financial year.

Lottery Draws

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to prevent frequent lottery draws in pubs and other premises. [16435]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government have given careful consideration to the issues raised by frequent lottery draws in premises.

The Gaming Board has expressed serious concern to the Government about plans by a company which runs lotteries on behalf of charities under the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976 to run frequent on-line lotteries in a range of outlets, including pubs and clubs.

The 1976 Act did not contemplate on-line lotteries, and therefore does nothing to prevent them. The use of on-line technology would allow the promotion of successive large scale lottery draws, in a series running through the day, simultaneously in a large number of different outlets.

Such rapid draw lotteries would thus have many of the characteristics of hard gambling. Their unrestricted availability to the public in high streets and neighbourhoods raises serious issues of gambling control.

Such a development in pubs where, of course, alcohol is available, and other public places, would undermine the long-standing policy which this Government fully support, that the harder forms of gambling should be confined to premises specially licensed for gambling, and with appropriate controls.

Under the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, the then Secretary of State for National Heritage used his powers to direct the Director General of the National Lottery not to license games which encourage excessive participation. The Director General himself has made it clear that he does not consider that rapid play lotteries are an appropriate development for the National Lottery.

However, the 1976 Act needs to be strengthened to give sufficient protection in the case of other lotteries.

We therefore propose to introduce legislation to amend the 1976 Act to restrict frequent lottery draws. The measures, which will be introduced in Parliament as soon as possible, will not interfere with existing conventional lotteries run for charitable or other purposes. It will only restrict new forms of rapid draw lottery.

The Government recognise that these lotteries could raise additional money for charities but, given the social risks, we do not consider that the new type of lottery would be an acceptable development. Since this will be primary legislation, those with an interest will have every opportunity to put their points of view in Parliament on the principle and the detail. I am also proposing to publish the legislation in draft form to allow interested parties a few weeks in which to make any representations.

I have placed in the Library an explanatory document which sets out the position in more detail.

Winson Green Prison

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the detention of visitors to Winson Green Prison on 14 October; and how many children were detained. [15191]

Ms Quin: On the morning of 14 October 1997, the movement of all traffic and persons into and out of Birmingham prison was suspended for approximately two and a half hours to forestall a suspected escape attempt. This is in line with security procedures. As a result, 15 adult visitors to prisoners were required to remain in the prison until normal operational procedures could be resumed. There were no children among this number.

Refreshment and toilet facilities were made available and the visitors were kept informed. The prison has apologised to the visitors who were inconvenienced.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on official hospitality for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997. [15234]

Mr. Straw: The information requested is provided in the following table.

Year	Department £	Agencies £	Non-departmental public bodies £
1990–91	30,080	—	1,268
1991–92	28,094	—	1,122
1992–93	19,122	36,529	6,270
1993–94	15,233	33,784	4,427
1994–95	15,990	11,478	6,523
1995–96	22,060	16,544	11,959
1996–97	35,412	26,358	23,289
1 May to 30 September 1997[1]	9,351	17,296	3,232

[1] Provisional.

Unfortunately, information on expenditure on official hospitality in 1980–81 and 1987–88 is no longer available. In addition, the figures for expenditure by the Department's non-departmental public bodies prior to 1994–95 are incomplete because some of the bodies no longer retain the necessary information.

The figures for expenditure by non-departmental public bodies exclude the Horserace Betting Levy Board and the Horserace Totaliser Board because they are not funded by central Government.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the total expenditure on all forms of publicity and advertising by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97, (v) the 1997–98, year to date, (vi) the 1997–98, full year estimate and (vii) the 1998–99 planned expenditure. [15237]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 11 November 1997]: The costs for publicity, including advertising, for my Department from 1993–94 to 1998–99 are as follows:

Year	£
1993–94	14,152,549
1994–95	14,102,358
1995–96	10,869,563
1996–97	8,327,916
1997–98 (year to date)	1,665,176
1997–98 (forecast)	4,923,000

Passport Agency
1993–94	79,945
1994–95	127,040
1995–96	94,814
1996–97	143,899
1997–98 (year to date)	12,500
1997–98 (forecast)	33,000
1998–99 (planned)	not yet allocated
Forensic Science Service
1997–98 (year to date)	280,000
1997–98 (forecast)	387,000
1998–99 (planned)	not yet allocated

Prior to 1997–98, under the Forensic Science Service Agency's framework document, publicity was provided by the Home Office and is included in the departmental spend.

I shall write to the hon. Member, as happened when he last asked a similar question, with regard to expenditure on publicity by my Department's Non-Departmental Public Bodies. This information is not held centrally and will take some time to collate.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each of the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team since 2 May, specifying in each case (a) the participating Minister or Ministers, (b) the destination of the trip, (c) the purpose of the trip and (d) the cost of the trip; and if he will make a statement. [15236]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 11 November 1997]: The table gives the information requested including costs for the Ministerial delegation.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on overseas travel for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997; and if he will provide a breakdown to show (1) air fares and (2) other expenditure relating to overseas travel. [15235]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 11 November 1997]: The available information on overseas travel and related expenditure is as follows:

	(a) Department			(b) Agencies			(c) Non-departmental public bodies

Information relating to 1980–81 is no longer held. That relating to 1987 to 1994, and a separate breakdown relating to air fares, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Parenting Classes

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proposals he has to introduce minimum standards or qualifications for persons offering parenting classes; and if he will make a statement; [15278]

(2) what proposals he has to set down minimum requirements for the content and duration of training and guidance sessions for parents as described in the consultation paper "Tackling Youth Crime"; and if he will make a statement. [15279]

Mr. Michael: Reform of the youth justice system is one of the Government's key priorities. At the heart of our approach to youth crime are a determination to reassert the importance of personal and social responsibility with more emphasis placed on making young offenders and their parents take more responsibility for their actions. Up to now, insufficient help or attention has been given to parents to change offending behaviour by their children. Action will include the introduction of a new parenting order which will help parents to accept their responsibilities for the behaviour of their children.

The parenting order will contain two elements. There will be an element which allows the court to direct that parents exercise control over their children and an element which allows the court to impose a requirement on parents to attend training and guidance sessions. This latter element of the order can last up to three months and require the parent to attend for no more than one session in any one week. The order will be supervised by a responsible officer who will, in the short term, probably be a member of the Social Services Department. In the longer term, it is envisaged that following the establishment of Youth Offender Teams it will be a member from those teams. We intend to include proposals for the parenting order and the establishment of Youth Offender Teams in the forthcoming Crime and Disorder Bill.

It is envisaged that a Responsible Officer will arrange for the provision of guidance sessions for parents. The introduction of Parenting Orders will be piloted. No decision has yet been made on how we will conduct the pilot exercise. The pilots will allow us to consider appropriate guidance on the best use of the Parenting Order and on standards to be met.

Race Relations

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans for section 11 funding; and what assessment he has made of their impact on education funding in the London Borough of Tower Hamlets. [15694]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have made it clear that the previous plans which would have meant a reduction in the level of funding from £83 million this year to £43 million next year will not stand. This will be of special significance for Tower Hamlets, which is the largest single recipient of section 11 grant.

We shall shortly let local authorities have more precise information about arrangements after August 1998, when current funding approvals are due to run out.

Immigration Detainees

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration detainees were held in immigration detention centres and HM prisons or other places of detention on the latest date for which figures are available, setting out the number of detainees at each named establishment and their national origin. [14584]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information on person held in detention under immigration powers as at 30 September 1997 by place of detention and nationality is given in tables 1 to 3.

Correspondence

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Spelthorne dated 19 August relating to immigration issues raised by Mr. L. J. Pope of Shepperton. [15635]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I shall be writing to the hon. Member shortly, further to the reply sent on 30 October by my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley).

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will give a substantive reply to the hon. Member's letters of 8 August 1997 and 17 October 1997 concerning the case of Shaukat Hayat, ref. DO 14448. [15862]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have written to my hon. Friend.

Huntingdon Life Sciences Laboratory

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date Huntingdon Life Sciences Laboratory is due to have its Animal Procedures Licence reviewed; if he will list the improvements required to prevent the licence form being revoked; and if he will make a statement. [15303]

Mr. George Howarth: The 16 conditions which the establishment had to meet before an application for a new Certificate of Designation could be considered were listed on 27 October in a reply to a question from the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), Official Report, column 744. These conditions have been met and a new Certificate of Designation was granted on 29 September. The previous Certificate has been revoked.

Polling Stations (Disabled Access)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to ensure that polling stations are accessible to a disabled person wishing to vote independently. [15477]

Mr. George Howarth: District and London Borough Councils are statutorily required to designate as polling places, so far as is reasonable and practicable, only places which are accessible to the disabled. Acting returning officers may apply to the Home Office and Scottish Office for grants towards the cost of providing temporary ramps and specially adapted polling screens to make polling stations accessible for those disabled voters who wish to vote in person. There is no limit on the number of applications which they may make for grant assistance. The Government are also considering the report "Polls Apart 2" published by SCOPE to see what further advice might be provided to acting returning officers.

Group 4

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Home Office Ministers, officials and Prison Service staff have taken paid employment with Group 4 Securitas after leaving his Department; how many of those employees were formerly responsible for overseeing, managing or inspecting contracts for private prisons; and if he will make a statement. [14466]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 1997]: Group 4 Prison and Court Services Limited have employed 20 former Prison Service employees. All were previously governor grades. Two had worked on private sector contracts whilst in the Prison Service.

Two governor grades are currently awaiting clearance from the Cabinet Office to commence employment with Group 4.

Information in respect of the employment of other officials and former Home Office Ministers is not available.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) his Department's policies and initiatives designed to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and (b) the departmental policies and initiatives designed to reduce other greenhouse gases; if he will estimate for each the annual reduction in tonnage of greenhouse gas emissions achieved in the most recent year for which figures are available compared to those for 1990; and what estimate he has made of further reductions, or increases, predicted for 2000 and 2010, assuming continuation of current policies. [15537]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the United Kingdom's Second Report under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change which was published in February 1997. It reports the United Kingdom's progress in implementing its programmes for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and gives a projection of what the programme is expected to deliver by 2000. The report projects forward to 2020 what the current programme is expected to achieve.

Emergency Communications Working Party

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the purpose of the ad hoc working party on emergency communications; who attends its meetings; how often it meets; on what dates it has met since 1993; when it was established; and if the papers of the working party are made available to the public. [15533]

Mr. George Howarth: The ad hoc working party on emergency communications (AWPEC) first met in 1985. It provides a forum for the exchange of information on emergency communications between the Home Office, other home departments and local authorities. It has met in March and September 1993, April and October 1994, April and December 1995, July 1996 and February 1997. The working party proceedings have not been made available to the public.

EU Conventions

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, columns 74–6, relating to two conventions of the European Community concerning extradition between its member states additional to those extant, by what means and on what dates each convention received parliamentary scrutiny; what consultation Ministers held with other bodies and persons affected by each convention; what notice was given to the public of the drafts of each convention; by what means the conventions will be ratified; when he expects to introduce legislation to amend the Extradition Act 1989; and what plans he has to publish explanatory memoranda prior to that date. [15566]

Mr. Michael: The right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), the previous Home Secretary, wrote to the Chairmen of the Scrutiny Committees on 3 March 1995 about the Convention on Simplified Extradition Procedure, enclosing a copy of the draft Council Act, a copy of the draft Convention and an Explanatory Note. He wrote to the Chairmen of the Scrutiny Committees on 3 April 1996 about the Convention Relating to Extradition Between Member States of the European Union enclosing a copy of the draft Convention, the draft Council Act and an Explanatory Note. He wrote again to the Chairman of the Select Committee on the European Communities on 7 May 1996. A further letter was sent to the Chairman of Sub-Committee E, House of Lords, on 25 June 1996 in response to comments received by that Committee from Liberty, Justice and Fair Trials Abroad.

Government consultation was carried out at official level with interested Whitehall Departments. During the course of negotiations, European Union conventions remain confidential between member states. Each member state is required to complete its own internal procedures to provide for ratification. In the case of the United Kingdom, this will require primary legislation to amend the Extradition Act 1989. I am not in a position to announce when this legislation might be introduced.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those Private Finance Initiative contracts entered into by his Department which transfer (a) volume risk, (b) risk of a return lower than one tied to movements in the retail prices index and (c) risk associated with ownership of the capital asset after the contract period; and if he will make a statement. [15593]

Mr. Straw: The following Private Finance Initiative contracts entered into by my Department transfer:

(a) volume risk:

Police National (telecommunications) Network

Prison PABX system

Immigration Caseworking project

United Kingdom Passport Agency passport processing contracts

Secure Training Centre, Cookham Wood

Coldingley Prison Industries Workshop

(b) risk of a return lower than one tied to movements in the retail price index:

Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse

Her Majesty's Prison Parc

Her Majesty's Prison Lowcham Grange

Secure Training Centre, Cookham Wood

Police National (telecommunications) Network

Immigration Caseworking project

United Kingdom Passport Agency passport processing contracts

Prison PABX system

Gatwick Immigration Detention facilities

Coldingley Prison Industries Workshop

(c) risk associated with ownership of the capital asset after the contract period:

Police National (telecommunications) Network

Immigration Caseworking project

United Kingdom Passport Agency passport processing contracts

Prison PABX system

Gatwick Immigration Detention facilities

Coldingley Prison Industries Workshop

All Home Office contracts are signed with value for money in mind.

Transfer of volume risk is impractical for contracts for prison facilities, as the client has control over the level of business. In such cases, risk is transferred by payment in relation to the contractor's liability to ensure that contractually specified facilities are made available to the demanding contractual timetable and that the availability of the service is maintained at a high level thereafter.

Payments to contractors may fall below movements in retail price levels if service quality is below specified standards.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what capital assets his Department will acquire under signed Private Finance Initiative contracts; what is the value of those assets; if, in each case, his auditors have provided an opinion that the asset will be recognised by the private sector contractor for accounting purposes; and if he will make a statement. [15601]

Mr. Straw: My Department will obtain services, not assets, under the duration of signed Private Finance Initiative (PFI) contracts. Design, Construct, Manage and Finance prisons (Altcourse, Parc and Lowdham Grange) and the Secure Training Centre for young offenders (Cookham Wood) will automatically become the Department's assets at no capital cost at the end of the PFI contracts in 25 and 15 years respectively. The Home Office has an option to acquire assets of the Immigration Caseworking project, and of the United Kingdom Passport Agency's passport processing contracts, at the end of the initial contract, on terms specified in the contracts. Any decision by the Home Office on whether to take up the options will depend on circumstances at the time.

It is not for the Department's auditors, the National Audit Office, to provide an opinion on whether assets will be recognised by the private sector for accounting purposes.

Telephones

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the access overload control scheme was established; what is its aim; how many categories there are in the scheme; how many mobile phone companies are subject to the scheme; which agencies or Government Departments are authorised to put the scheme into practice; and how many times the scheme has been put into practice since it was established. [15535]

Mr. George Howarth: The access overload scheme was first established in November 1989. Its aim is to ensure that in an emergency, essential users at the scene of an incident will have priority access to cellular radio networks which might otherwise be congested by non-essential users.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the purpose of the Government telephone preference scheme; when it was established; how many categories there are in the scheme; how these categories are defined; and how many times the scheme has been put into practice since 1967. [15534]

Mr. George Howarth: The purpose of the Government telephone preference scheme (GTPS) is to provide assured access for essential users in an emergency, when there may be a heavy load placed on the public telephone network, or the network itself may have been damaged. It was established in the late 1950s when there was a threat of massive nuclear war destroying significant parts of the national infrastructure.

There are three categories in the scheme, the first category being that of essential users such as the emergency services or government response teams. The second category is public call boxes and some payphones, and the third is the general public.

Records prior to 1987 are no longer available.

Since 1987, the preference scheme was activated by British Telecom as follows:

August 1987: Hungerford

October 1987: South-east England

January 1890: Southern England

December 1990: Midlands

February 1993: Welford upon Avon

June 1993: Chadford.

There are two categories in the scheme. First, public access in ten classes of equal status and, secondly, essential user access in three classes.

The Police Incident Commander has the authority to request the invocation of the scheme or exceptionally, the Cabinet Office, in consultation with the lead Government Department for the incident.

The scheme has been invoked on three occasions at Aintree, Crewe and Gatwick, all in April 1997.

Prisons (Health Care)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison establishments in England and Wales have one or more trained health care managers on their staff; and what plans he has to increase the number of staff trained in health care management. [13196]

Ms Quin [holding answer 30 October 1997]: Information is not collected centrally on the management qualifications of staff with managerial responsibility for the delivery of health care. All nurse qualified health care staff and doctors will have received some training in health care management, as part of their professional training.

The Prison Service has an active education and training policy for health care staff, supported through central funds. Governors are encouraged to give priority to management training, particularly in relation to management National Vocational Qualifications for nurses and health care staff in managerial posts.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many health care managers working within the Prison Service have National Health Service experience; and what proportion of health care managers within the service this figure represents. [14508]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 November 1997]: Information is not collected centrally in the form requested. However, data from 122 establishments indicate that on 31 March 1997, 42 health care managers were registered nurses and, therefore, would have had National Health Service experience. This figure represents 34 per cent. of health care managers in those establishments.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the provision of false information to the immigration authorities with a view to obtaining political asylum or British citizenship; and if deportation orders against people providing such information carry rights of appeal. [14289]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: If false information were supplied in support of an application for asylum, this might have a bearing on the credibility of the applicant but would need to be considered as part of the totality of the evidence in determining whether the criteria in the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees were met. If it came to light after a grant of asylum that information relevant to the grant had been given falsely, the decision would need to be re-assessed in the light of the totality of the evidence taking account of the new facts.

Under legislation, all refused asylum seekers have a right of appeal before any removal to a country where they claim to fear persecution.

As to British citizenship, it is an offence, contrary to section 46 of the British Nationality Act 1981, to make any false statement for the purpose of procuring anything to be done or not to be done under that Act. Where the Secretary of State is misled as to the applicant's identity, the grant of citizenship may be treated as a nullity.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in 1996 (a) what was the total cost to the Government of supporting political asylum seekers, (b) how many of them were held in detention and how many subsequently deported and (c) how many illegal immigrants were deported; and what are the figures for the current year to date. [14231]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information regarding the direct cost to Central Government of supporting asylum seekers is given below. This relates to persons seeking asylum on political or other grounds of persecution. I regret that information about the other indirect costs to Central or Local Government is not available, such as the costs involved in providing medical treatment, education, housing and social work for asylum seekers.

The estimated cost to the Department of Social Security of support for asylum seekers in 1996 was £300 million.

This information is based on the February, May, August and November 1996 Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiries, and the May 1996 Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit Management Information System. Information on the receipt of other Social Security benefits is based solely on those asylum seekers also claiming Income Support, as asylum seekers cannot be identified from other data sources.

The Department of Health has contributed to the costs of supporting those asylum seekers not eligible for Department for Social Security benefits, by providing three special grants to local authorities, which totalled £12.7 million in 1996–97. These grants were:

The Persons from Abroad with Children grant (PFACG) for asylum seeking families—£4.1 million;

The Asylum Seekers Accommodation grant (ASAG) for adults without children–£5.6 million;

The Unaccompanied Asylum-Seeking Children grant (UASC)—£3 million.

Reliable information on the historical flow of persons placed into detention, and of those who were subsequently deported, can be obtained only through examination of individual case records. I regret that the information requested is, therefore, available only at disproportionate cost. However, as at 11 December 1996, the number of asylum seekers held in detention, solely under the powers contained in Schedule 2 or 3 of the Immigration Act 1971, was 754; the equivalent figure as at 30 September 1997 was 772.

The provisional figure for the number of persons subject to enforcement action (i.e. served with illegal entry notices or where deportation proceedings had been initiated) removed from the United Kingdom between 1 January 1997 and 30 September 1997 is 4,949. This includes voluntary/supervised departures made after enforcement action had been initiated. The figure covers asylum and non-asylum enforcement cases but excludes persons removed as a result of port refusal procedures. Equivalent information for 1996 can be found in table 7.1 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, 1996", (Cm 3737). Copies of this publication are available in the Library.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of prisoners on remand who are mentally ill; and if he will make a statement. [13721]

Ms Quin [holding answer 3 November 1997]: Research published last year by the Institute of Psychiatry following a survey of the prevalence of mental disorder among the remand prison population of England and Wales for the Prison Service considered that 66 per cent. of the adult males, 53 per cent. of the young men and 77 per cent. of the women could be diagnosed as suffering from some form of mental disorder, including harmful or dependent substance misuse.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of (a) the numbers and (b) the percentages of employees in the Immigration and Nationality Department according to (i) gender and (ii) ethnic origin. [14978]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) collects data on the ethnic origin of its staff on a confidential, self declaration and voluntary basis. Details of the breakdown of the ethnic origin and gender of staff in the Directorate is as follows:

	White	Black	Asian	Other ethnic origin	Not provided	Total	Number of ethnic staff as percentage
Male	2,066	81	147	37	441	2,772	9.56
Female	2,017	168	355	31	314	2,885	19.20
Total	4,083	249	502	68	755	5,657	14.48

SCOTLAND

Health Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by health care provider, for each of the last four years, the number of contracts each health authority had in place, indicating how many of these had been referred for arbitration within the NHS region; and how many were left unsigned by (a) the provider and (b) the purchaser at the end of the year to which they applied, and, for 1997–98, by the end of October 1997. [14612]

Mr. Galbraith: Information on the numbers and status of contracts in place in the NHS in Scotland in the level of detail requested is not collected centrally. No contract disputes have been referred to The Scottish Office for formal arbitration in the last four years.

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of per capita spending on health services in Scotland in the most recent year for which figures are available. [14920]

Mr. Galbraith: Provisional figures indicate that in 1996–97, the level of per capita spending on health services in Scotland was £860.

Sleep Laboratory

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the funding of the Scottish National Sleep Laboratory in Edinburgh. [14418]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 7 November 1997]: I understand that Health Boards and The Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh NHS Trust are in discussion about funding for the Sleep Laboratory in Edinburgh which is a matter primarily for them.

Monitor Consultancy

Mr. MacShane: to ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the nature and value of contracts his Department has entered into and (b) discussions Ministers or officials have held with the Monitor Consultancy since 1990. [14949]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 7 November 1997]: The Scottish Office and associated agencies have no record of any contracts or discussions with the Monitor consultancy since 1990.

Fair Trade (Coffee and Tea)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the oral Statement by the Secretary of State for International Development, Official Report, 5 November, column 332, if he will instruct officials to serve coffee and tea furnished by suppliers who adhere to fair trade standards in his Department. [15497]

Mr. Dewar: I refer to the answer which the Prime Minister has given today. All procurement decisions in my Department are based on the Government's policy of value for money.

Community Councils

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to encourage local authorities to increase the level of grant to community councils; [15440]

(2) what has been the level of funding for the Association of Scottish Community Councils for the years 1993 to 1997; what is the projected funding for the year 1997–98; and how many community councils in Scotland are members of the association; [15439]

(3) what plans he has to encourage the provision of training for community councillors, with special reference to planning and licensing issues. [15441]

Mr. Chisholm: Level of grant and other assistance to individual community councils is a matter for local authorities' discretion under Section 55 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973. While the Government recognise the value of effective, adequately resourced community councils, they also recognise that local authorities have many competing calls on their available resources and are accountable to their local electorate for their decisions on spending. My right hon. Friend therefore has no plans to intervene in local authorities' consideration of spending priorities involving community councils.

At a national level, the Scottish Office first awarded grant to the Association of Scottish Community Councils in 1996–97, to the sum of £36,000. Grant proposed for 1997–98 is £37,000. The purpose of the grant is to help the Association develop staff support, run a national office base, and produce a quarterly newsletter. Grant was initially envisaged for three years; grant each year depends on the association meeting relevant targets agreed with the Scottish Office. I understand that 470 community councils are members of the association, although its newsletter is sent to member and non-member community councils alike.

I understand that training is one of the services that the association aims to facilitate. Local authorities also have the discretion to provide training services to community councils under Section 55 of the 1973 Act. In addition, the Scottish Office has granted £27,000 to Planning Aid Scotland over the last three years to train community councillors.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) his Department's policies and initiatives designed to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and (b) the departmental policies and initiatives designed to reduce other greenhouse gases; if he will estimate for each the annual reduction in tonnage of greenhouse gas emissions achieved inthe most recent year for which figures are available compared to those for 1990; and what estimate he has made of further reductions, or increases, predicted for 2000 and 2010, assuming continuation of current policies. [15541]

Mr. Chisholm: I refer the hon. Member to the United Kingdom's Second Report under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change which was published in February 1997. It reports the UK's progress in implementing its programme for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and gives a projection of what the programme is expected to deliver by 2000. The report projects forward what the current programme is expected to achieve to 2020.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the expenditure by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on overseas travel for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (iv) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997; and if he will provide a breakdown to show (1) air fares and (2) other expenditure relating to overseas travel. [15247]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 11 November 1997]: Information on overseas travel in the Scottish Office and its agencies is not held separately. Air fares and other expenditure relating to overseas travel cannot be disaggregated from total expenditure on travel and accommodation in the Scottish Office and its agencies without disproportionate costs in staff time.

Information on non-departmental bodies is not held centrally.

Farmed Salmon

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Scottish Office will make a decision on whether to license the drugs cypermethrin and ivermectin for the general treatment of sea lice in farmed salmon. [14897]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 12 November 1997]: Authorisation of veterinary medicines such as cypermethrin and ivermectin is a matter for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate.

Requisite discharge consents enabling the use of ivermectin have been issued by the Scottish Environment Protection Agency in a number of cases. Further use of this substance has been requested and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is currently considering whether to exercise his power of call-in under the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the financial impact of the lack of a suitable treatment for sea lice on the Scottish salmon farming industry; and what assessment he has made of the welfare implications of sea lice eating farmed salmon. [14803]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 12 November 1997]: The cost to the industry of dealing with the problem of sea lice has been estimated to be of the order of £20 million to £30 million per annum. It is a major issue and one which, for welfare as well as economic reasons, requires a variety of solutions, not just medicinal ones. My officials continue to discuss the matter with industry representatives.

HEALTH

Leg Amputations

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many leg amputations caused by gangrene there were in the United Kingdom between 1977 and 1997; and what is the average cost of such operations to the National Health Service. [12740]

Mr. Boateng: The information available on the number of leg amputations carried out in National Health Service hospitals in England where gangrene is mentioned as a primary or secondary cause, is set out in the table.

England

	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
A. Total number of leg amputations (OPCS4R:X09)	6,403	6,504	6,813	6,842	6,890	6,679
B. Leg amputations with a primary diagnosis of gangrene (ICD9:785.5) (included in A above)	761	714	667	738	684	553
C. Leg amputations with gangrene mentioned as a secondary diagnosis (ICD9:785.5) included in A above)	1,268	1,141	1,260	1,249	1,286	1,265

Currently the cost of this procedure is not collected centrally and therefore an average cost is unavailable.

Questions relating to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Paracetamol

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into safe paracetamol. [14281]

Ms Jowell: We have not commissioned any research into paracetamol. Paracetamol taken at the recommended dosage is safe. However, paracetamol is available in combination with the antidote methionine where there is a danger of overdose. Data on the safety of products containing paracetamol and products containing paracetamol with methionine have been evaluated by the Licensing Authority and its expert advisory bodies when considering applications for marketing authorisations submitted to the Medicines Control Agency (MCA). Following grant of a marketing authorisation, the MCA continues to monitor safety for all authorised medicinal products, including those containing paracetamol and paracetamol with methionine.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Helen Jackson) of 20 May, Official Report, column 498, on the subject of multiple sclerosis, when the report on the way in which health authorities are implementing his Department's Guidelines will be completed; and what consultations his Department undertook with the Multiple Sclerosis Society relating to the implementation of the guidelines. [14471]

Mr. Boateng: Officials have collected details about how health authorities are implementing the guidance. The Department has kept in touch with the Multiple Sclerosis Society about the implementation of the guidance over the past year.

Social Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the report, "Removing Barriers", published by the Local Government Association; and if he will make a statement. [14585]

Mr. Boateng: We welcome the Local Government Association report, "Removing Barriers: the Case for a New Deal for Social Services and Social Security". Both my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health and for Social Security are ensuring that it is taken into account in looking at the interface between the social security and social services systems as part of our comprehensive spending reviews.

Myodil

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons Glaxo was granted a licence for Myodil; and what assessment he has made of overseas evidence that the drug is unsafe. [14608]

Ms Jowell: Myodil has been in use since the 1940s and was granted a Product Licence of Right (PLR), when the Medicines Act 1968 came into force. PLRs were reviewed by the Committee on Review of Medicines, which issued advice to the Licensing Authority. Applications for reviewed PLRs were assessed on the basis of the safety, quality and efficacy of the product. A reviewed product licence for Myodil was granted in 1987. However, Myodil was taken off the market by Glaxo for commercial reasons later in 1987. The safety of all licensed medicines is kept under continuous review by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and Medicines Control Agency. Safety data from all sources, including overseas, are included in this process.

Press Releases (Internet)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health within what time period his Department's press releases are placed on the Central Office of Information Internet services; and for what reasons press releases are not placed on the Internet at the same time as they are issued to the media. [14593]

Ms Jowell: All the Department's press releases, other than operational notes solely for the attention of the media, are placed on the Central Office of Information's (COI) government press release Internet site at approximately 10.30 am one working day after their issue to the media. COI will shortly be improving their Internet site, as a consequence of which press releases will be available to the public on the same day that they are issued to the media. At present, all Government press releases are updated on the Internet the next working day, in large batches manually. The individual tasked with this then has other duties to perform at COI. If press releases were placed on the Internet immediately at the time of issue, one dedicated person would have to be deployed for this task. COI have commissioned software specifically designed for them to enable Press Releases to be updated and placed on the Internet at regular intervals during the day. This will achieve the same day service.

Cannabis

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research his Department has commissioned on the use of cannabis and its safety; what the cost of this research was; and where and when it will be published. [14992]

Mr. Boateng: Department of Health officials, including professionals, are keeping the available research into the risks and medical use of cannabis under review. Since 1996, expenditure on this activity through the Policy Research Programme has amounted to £10,705. The Department has not recently commissioned basic research in this area. Misuse of drugs legislation allows for research involving cannabis under Home Office licence. Any proposed clinical trial would have to be submitted to the Medicines Control Agency in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968. Any application for a licence or a certificate, or both, would be considered in the normal way.

Meningitis (Southampton)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the extent of the outbreak of meningitis in Southampton; how many persons (a) have died and (b) are under observation; if vaccine is available for all students at (i) Southampton Institute and (ii) Southampton University; and if he will make a statement. [14729]

Ms Jowell: There have been six confirmed cases of meningitis in the Southampton area since 1 October. Three patients have died; three have recovered, and been discharged from hospital. One patient is under observation for suspected meningitis.

At Southampton University vaccine has been given to all first year students, all staff and all those resident or working in the halls of residence. The University has now made vaccine available to all students. A programme of vaccination for all first year students and all students living in halls of residence at Southampton Institute started on 10 November and is expected to be completed by 14 November.

Renal Services (Lancashire and Cumbria)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the provision of renal services in the Lancashire and Cumbria health districts. [14766]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans at this time to review renal services in the Lancashire and Cumbria health districts. However, my hon. Friend may wish to refer to the National Renal Services Review, completed and published in 1996, which reported on reconfigurations of renal services throughout England.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of accident and emergency services in Gloucestershire. [14906]

Mr. Boateng: The future pattern of accident and emergency services in Gloucestershire is a matter for Gloucestershire Health Authority. The health authority is currently undertaking public consultation on "Health Gloucestershire: A five year strategy for health and health services"; the strategy does not propose any changes to the current pattern of accident and emergency services in the health authority area at this stage.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has issued on the average size of population in the catchment area of a general hospital needed to sustain a full accident and emergency service. [15503]

Mr. Boateng: Health authorities and National Health Service trusts should provide an accident and emergency service which meets the needs of local people. The size of the population served by accident and emergency departments will therefore vary according to local circumstances.

There is evidence that seriously ill and injured patients do better in larger departments where a high proportion of care is offered by consultant staff, with access to backup from a range of specialist departments. In May 1995 the Department of Health published the "Review of Literature on Accident and Emergency Departments and Clinical Outcomes copies of which have been placed in the Library."

Advocacy Services (Children)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advocacy services are available to children on a national basis; what support they receive from public funds; what national standards of operation apply to them; and what monitoring his Department undertakes of such services. [15039]

Mr. Boateng: Many local authorities and voluntary organisations provide advocacy services to children. This year the Department of Health has contributed a total of £93,163 to help some voluntary organisations provide information and advice to children and young people, and act as advocates for them. This includes recent funding to assist the development of national standards of advocacy.

These are unlikely to be implemented fully for a further two years. Advocacy services are not required to be inspected by local authority Inspection units; and the Department of Health has not undertaken any monitoring via its Social Services Inspectorate.

NHS Purchasing

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next intends to market-test the central purchasing function of the NHS. [15083]

Mr. Milburn: There are no plans to market test the central purchasing function of the National Health Service Supplies Authority.

Cystic Fibrosis

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the care and services available for cystic fibrosis sufferers and their families. [15053]

Ms Jowell: Over the past 20 years or more there has been progressive improvement in the care of people with cystic fibrosis, reflected in the increasing numbers who survive into adulthood. A follow up study by the Clinical Standards Advisory Group of access to, and availability of, specialist services, completed in 1996, found that access to such services for patients with cystic fibrosis had been improved in most regions since the original study three years earlier. The follow-up report was sent to health authorities and trusts in December 1996 with a request that they consider carefully the suggestions for action, and in particular the need for continuing innovation in contracting. We shall continue to work with health professionals and all those with an interest to improve the care of people with cystic fibrosis and their quality of life.

Chiropody and Podiatry

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the guidelines that are issued and health needs assessments that health authorities undertake to ensure the availability of chiropody and podiatry services to meet the needs of the local population. [15364]

Mr. Boateng: A joint Department of Health/National Health Service task force conducted a review of NHS chiropody services in 1994. Its report, "Feet First", provides guidance to the NHS on planning and delivering chiropody services. As with other health care services, local health authorities determine the quantity and scope of the chiropody services they are able to provide for their residents. They have to take into account the total resources available to them and bear in mind local priorities and circumstances.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to safeguard the provision of chiropody on the NHS. [15431]

Mr. Boateng: Chiropody is one of the range of National Health Service services provided to meet the needs of the population. The quantity and scope of chiropody services is determined by individual health authorities and general practitioner fundholders in the light of local priorities and resources.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the number of (a) face-to-face contacts and (b) initial contacts, with chiropody and podiatry staff for (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) 1994–95. [15363]

Mr. Boateng: Information for 1996–97 is not yet available. The numbers of reported patient contacts with the chiropody service in the last three years in England are as follows.

Thousands

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
Total face-to-face contacts[1]	8,005	8,270	8,328
Initial face-to-face contacts[2]	1,006	975	951

[1] A contact is any face-to-face meeting between a member of chiropody staff and an individual patient or patient's proxy, where treatment or advice is given.

[2] An initial contact is the first in an episode of care with a service provider. An episode of care may be initiated by a referral to the chiropody staff from a hospital, general practitioner or other health service professional.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the NHS expenditure on NHS chiropody and podiatry in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1994–95. [15370]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is contained in the table:

Total expenditure on community chiropody services England—1994–95 to 1996–97

	Chiropody £000s
1994–95	90,122
1995–96	96,674
1996–97	99,647

Note:
Figures for 1996–97 are provisional.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the budget for each health authority or health board allocated for chiropody and podiatry services in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1995–96. [15369]

Mr. Boateng: Health authorities are not normally allocated budgets for particular services or individual client groups. Information on local spending decisions or particular services is not collected centrally. It is for authorities to make their own decisions about the level of resources required in each case on the basis of an assessment of local needs and priorities, and taking into account the national priorities set by Government.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities which have notified his Department of (a) reductions or increases in chiropody services in 1996–97 relative to 1995–96 and (b) planned reductions or increases in chiropody services in 1998–99. [15371]

Mr. Boateng: Health authorities are not required to notify the Department of changes in activity in particular services. Although the Department wishes to see health authorities and general practitioner fundholders provide the full range of National Health Service services including chiropody, detailed planning decisions on levels of provision are taken locally according to the needs of the population served.

Lariam

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors were taken into account by the Malaria Advisory Committee when recently recommending that travellers to any part of the world for two weeks or less should not take Mefloquine (Lariam); and what assessment he had made of the need for guidance for those travelling for more than two weeks but less than six months. [15450]

Ms Jowell: The "Guidelines for the prevention of malaria in travellers from the United Kingdom", which were published in September this year, give full details of the issues considered and references used by the group of experts who compiled them. The guidelines are comprehensive and cover periods of travel of varying lengths, including advice for travel more than two weeks but less than six months. The guidelines advise that the prophylactic regimen of choice will depend on a variety of factors such as the level of risk from malaria which exists in the country to be visited, the length of stay, the activities the traveller will be engaging in, the traveller's medical history, the effectiveness of each prophylactic regimen and the potential adverse effects of the regimen. The guidelines do recommend mefloquine for trips shorter than two weeks if the risk of highly chloroquine resistant malaria is high.

Organ Donation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the letter of 7 October from the Minister of State (POH/6/5437/13), what was the outcome of the meeting with Robert Johnson and Dr. N. J. Evans, about opt-out organ donation. [14470]

Mr. Boateng: Ministers have met with a number of organisations in the transplant field, including Mr. Robert Johnson, transplant surgeon and President of the British Transplantation Society, and Dr. N. J. Evans, Chairman of the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority about opt-out organ donation. These meetings have been most helpful and have contributed to our current consideration of options for the way forward in transplantation.

Thalidomide

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) undertaken and (b) evaluated into the use of thalidomide in the treatment of (i) leprosy, (ii) tuberculosis and (iii) AIDS-related wasting and mouth ulcers; and if he will make a statement. [15009]

Ms Jowell: Thalidomide is not used in the United Kingdom in the treatment of tuberculosis. It has an important place in the management of some patients with leprosy as set out in the Departments "Memorandum on Leprosy". The Department has considered studies carried out on the use of thalidomide in the treatment of leprosy but has not undertaken research in this area. Copies of the latest edition of the Memorandum, issued in August of this year, are available in the Library. Thalidomide has been used for treating AIDS related wasting and mouth ulcers but the Department has not undertaken or evaluated any research on this topic. As thalidomide is not licensed for such treatments it is only available on a "named patient basis" and the use of the drug is a matter for clinicians and patients to discuss and agree according to individual circumstances.

Antioxidants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) undertaken and (b) evaluated into the risk posed to cancer patients by the consumption of antioxidants; and if he will make a statement. [15010]

Mr. Boateng: No research has been undertaken or evaluated by this Department into the risk posed to cancer patients by the consumption of antioxidants. The Medical Research Council, the main agency through which the Government supports medical and clinical research, provided support in 1995–96 for the following projects in the general area of antioxidants and the development of cancer, although these projects addressed the question of the anticarcinogenic effect of antioxidants rather than the effect of antioxidants on cancer once established:

Mechanisms of modulation of carincogenesis by antioxidants: genetic control of the anticarcinogenic response in mice (MRC Toxicology Unit, Leicester);

Prospective markers of antioxidant status in relation to future cardiovascular disease, lung and stomach cancer (MRC Dunn Nutrition Unit in Cambridge). This study was funded by the Department of Health's Policy Research Programme; the European Prospective investigation of Cancer (EPIC) which is a prospective study to identify dietary factors and dietary profiles which modify the risk for a range of chronic diseases including cancer. This takes the form of both direct support to the MRC Biostatistics Unit and grant support to participants; a human study at the MRC Dunn Nutrition Unit of an individual's lifetime nutritional habits and their relative risk of developing cancers of the breast and bowel.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to establish a National Standing Committee to oversee the development of xenotransplantation; and if he will make a statement. [15011]

Mr. Boateng: The establishment of the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority was announced on 16 January 1997 in response to the recommendations of the Advisory Group on the Ethics of Xenotransplantation. Its membership was announced on 14 March 1997. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 27 October at columns 764–65.

Gene Therapy and Artificial Organs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase investment in research into the development and application of gene therapy and artificial organs; and if he will make a statement. [15012]

Ms Jowell: Research into these areas is being conducted internationally. In some cases industry is in the lead. Within the United Kingdom, the Government will continue to encourage research relevant to these areas according to the scientific quality of proposals and to competing priorities. Much of this research will continue to be taken forward by the Research Councils.

Basildon and Thurrock General Hospitals NHS Trust

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what conditions or restrictions are placed on the Clinical Director of the Basildon and Thurrock General Hospitals NHS Trust in relation to his contract with the Nuffield Hospital; [15832]

(2) when the existing contract for the holder of Clinical Director of the Basildon and Thurrock General Hospitals NHS trust expires. [15831]

Mr. Milburn: Trusts are free to set terms and conditions of employment as they think fit. Those of Basildon and Thurrock Hospitals Trust (B&THT) are in line with the Whitley Council. We are advised that the Medical Director of the B&THT has no contract with the Nuffield Hospital.

Each of the executive directors of the B&THT, including the medical director, are employed on rolling 18-month contracts; they have as such no termination date. The executive directors' contracts are subject to regular review by the trust's remuneration committee.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Tuition Fees

18. Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans for tuition fees for higher education. [14339]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State plans to require most new entrants to full-time undergraduate courses from autumn 1998 to contribute up to a maximum of £1,000 a year to tuition fees, depending on their parents', spouses' or own income. Tuition will continue to be free for students from low-income families.

Examination Assessors

19. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what checks are made on the competence of assessors of A-level and GCSE scripts in England and Wales. [14340]

Ms Estelle Morris: Responsibility for ensuring that A-level and GCSE examiners maintain standards from year to year and across syllabuses lies with the GCE and GCSE Examining Boards, in collaboration with the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority and the Qualifications, Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales. The Boards follow detailed Codes of Practice, agreed annually with the QCA and ACCAC. New examiners are appointed only if they have the relevant qualifications and experience, and the performance of existing examiners is closely monitored.

Out-of-School Learning and Homework Centres

20. Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made on the development of out-of-school learning and homework centres. [14341]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have made significant progress. Fifty Summer Literacy Schools ran as a pilot scheme last summer and 500 will be supported next year. Study support centres will open shortly at a number of Premier League football clubs. We will consult shortly on a National Framework for Motivating Pupils outside the Classroom and will continue to work with colleagues in the Department for Culture, Media and Sport on proposals for Lottery funding to be available for out-of-school hours activities.

Further and Higher Education (Enrolment)

21. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the number of students entering further and higher education. [14343]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made it clear that the Government are setting a target for an extra 500,000 people to enter further and higher education by the year 2002.

22. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the numbers of students entering higher education from neighbourhoods currently with the lowest participation rates; and if he will make a statement. [14344]

Dr. Howells: The Government are committed to increasing and widening access to higher education. We will want to follow up the Dearing Report's recommendations for widening access and we are currently analysing the responses to the consultation on the Report. We will make an announcement in due course.

Class Sizes

23. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects that every child aged between five and seven years will be taught in a class of 30 pupils or fewer. [14346]

Mr. Byers: We shall honour the pledge given before the election and shall have reduced class sizes to 30 pupils or fewer for every five, six and seven-year-old by the end of this Parliament.

Nursery Education

24. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what new plans he has for the inspection service for establishments caring for the under fives. [14347]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department, jointly with the Department of Health, will be consulting early in the new year on establishing a more uniform regulatory and inspection regime for early years settings providing day care and nursery education.

Environmental Education

25. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding he plans to allocate to environmental education. [14348]

Ms Estelle Morris: Decisions as to what funds to allocate to environmental eduction are for individual schools. Schools manage their own budgets under Local Management of Schools. Also, they can use the funds we have made available under the School Effectiveness Grant, which totals £130.1 million in 1997–98.

Grant-maintained Schools

26. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations his Department has received about problems created by the admission policies of grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement. [14349]

Mr. Byers: Responses to our White Paper "Excellence in Schools" demonstrated very strong support for our aim of ensuring that all admission authorities in an area work together effectively, for the benefit of all parents. The new Code of Practice will set out national guidelines to apply to all LEA and school admission authorities.

New Deal

27. Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the response of employers to the new deal for young unemployed people. [14350]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Dr. Stoate).

28. Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if young people entering the Gateway phase of the new deal will be able to gain some work experience without losing benefits entitlement. [14351]

Mr. Andrew Smith: People claiming the Jobseeker's Allowance are able to benefit from work experience as part of an employment or training programme without losing benefit entitlement. This includes young people in the Gateway phase of the New Deal.

Literacy

29. Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's literacy strategy. [14352]

Mr. Byers: Our National Literacy Strategy is an ambitious programme for achieving our target of 80 per cent. of 11-year-olds reaching the expected standard for their age in English by 2002. The strategy will guarantee every primary schools teach the opportunity to learn about the most effective methods of teaching literacy, so that all pupils can achieve their full potential. We shall be investing £50 million next year in training for teachers and in providing books for schools.

School Applications

30. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the subject of improving the organisation of applications to schools in England. [14353]

Mr. Byers: Our proposals for school admissions have stressed the importance of the development, through local admissions forums, of helpful and timely information for parents and of common timetables for applications. This has been widely welcomed.

"Excellence in Schools"

31. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he has responded to the consultation on the White Paper "Excellence in Schools". [14354]

Mr. Byers: We received approximately 8,000 responses to the full and summary versions of the White Paper and are considering them all carefully. In response, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already announced a strengthening of the proposed new framework for the organisation of schools, designed to enable schools to remain firmly focused on raising standards. These changes illustrate this Government's commitment to genuine consultation. Further policy announcements in response to the White Paper will be made as appropriate.

National Grid for Learning

32. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans for the national grid for learning. [14355]

Dr. Howells: I would refer my hon. Friend to the consultation paper "Connecting the Learning Society" which was launched by the Prime Minister on Tuesday 7 October. This document is available in the Library.

Early Years Education

33. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the impact of his new formula for resource allocation for early years education. [14356]

Ms Estelle Morris: A copy of the guidance recently issued to local education authorities setting out the arrangements for early years education has been placed in the Library. Funds will be provided to support the Government's policy of providing an education place for all four-year-olds whose parents want it. Details of the funding formula and its impact for individual local authorities will be announced in due course as part of the local government finance settlement.

School Governors

34. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to promote a greater awareness of the contribution of school governors. [14357]

Mr. Byers: Our White Paper "Excellence in Schools" makes it clear that school governors have a special role as partners in the education service. They provide a vital link between the school and the community, and we propose to strengthen that link by increasing the number of parent governors. We are most grateful to the 300,000 school governors in England who give their time so generously. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has personally written twice to every governing body emphasising the vital role we hope they will play in improving school performance. We are also making available specific training support to help governing bodies in their main task of raising standards in our schools.

Tennis

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Eduation and Employment (1) if he will estimate the number of tennis courts which have been sold off during the last 10 years by schools and sixth form colleges for housing re-development schemes; [15152]

(2) if he will estimate the number of (a) schools and (b) sixth form colleges with tennis courts within their grounds, indicating the total number of such courts in (i) 1987 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available. [15153]

Mr. Byers: This information is not collected centrally.

Higher Education Funding

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what amount each educational institution funded by the Higher Education Funding Council received from (a) the HEFC, (b) the research councils and British Academy and (c) sources other than the pubic sector for the last year figures are available specifying the amount under (d) received from the institutions endowment. [14626]

Dr. Howells: Information on the funding allocated to institutions by the Higher Education Funding Council for England for the academic year 1997–98 is contained in a circular (reference HEFCE Circular 6/97), a copy of which is in the Library. Higher education institutions also receive fees paid via LEAs for students holding mandatory awards.

The latest information on the funding allocated to institutions by the research councils is contained in a number of tables, copies of which have today been placed in the Library. Comparable information on the funding allocated by the British Academy is not available.

We do not collect information on income received by institutions from sources other than public funds. The Further and Higher Education Act 1992 specifically debars Government, through the Higher Education Funding Council for England, form having regard to private income in distributing public funds.

Schools Funding

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the average level of grant per child received by each authority for the provision of primary and secondary school education. [15028]

Mr. Byers: Revenue Support Grant for local authorities is provided through the standard spending assessment formula, but it is up to each authority to decide how to fund primary and secondary school education. The following table sets out for 1997–98 the primary and secondary SSA per pupil figures for each local education authority.

Dance and Drama

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to respond to the Dearing Committee recommendations on the funding of students of dance and drama; and if he will make a statement. [15835]

Dr. Howells: Our response of 23 July to the Dearing Inquiry report made it clear that we would review what arrangements might be put in place for providing financial support for dance and drama students when the current scheme expires. This work is being taken forward by officials from this Department and the Department for Culture, Media and Sport.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if his Department has lead responsibility for the funding of students of dance and drama. [15836]

Dr. Howells: The Department for Education and Employment funds dance and drama courses in public further and higher education institutions through grants to the FEFC and HEFCE. Some students on these courses will be eligible for support through mandatory and discretionary awards and student loans. In addition, the Department will be contribution a minimum of £9 million of new funds to the interim bursary scheme over the four academic years the scheme will run.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the funding of training for dance and drama; and if he will make a statement. [15834]

Dr. Howells: The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has received a number of representations on the subject from various interested bodies.

Church Schools

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from the Church of England and the Roman Catholic Church on the relationship between church schools and local education authorities; and if he will make a statement. [14332]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson).

Performing Arts Students (Grants)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the discretionary grant system for higher and further education with particular reference to students of the performing arts; and if he will make a statement. [15833]

Dr. Howells: We intend to abolish discretionary awards under section 1(6) and section 2 of the Education Act 1962, amended. We are now considering with LEAs and others what new arrangements for post-16 discretionary support might be put in place, including arrangements for students of the performing arts.

National Curriculum Tests

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve results in the National Curriculum tests for seven, 11 and 14-year-olds in the coming year. [14319]

Mr. Byers: On 7 July we published a White Paper, "Excellence in Schools", which set out our agenda for raising standards in schools. A copy of the White Paper is available in the Library.

Written Answers to Questions

PRIME MINISTER

Campaigns

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met representatives of campaigns to (a) ban tobacco advertising, (b) restore the links between earnings and the level of basic pensions, (c) end laboratory procedures on living creatures, (d) oppose student tuition fees, (e) oppose a reduction in lone parent benefits and (f) support a ban on hunting with dogs. [15950]

The Prime Minister: All Government Ministers have meetings with a wide range of organisations and individuals.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Student Debt

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if (a) Student Loans Company debt and (b) student overdraft debt can be offset against a claimant's assets. [16139]

Mr. Keith Bradley: When the amount of a claimant's capital is calculated in the income-related benefits, the value of a capital asset is reduced by the amount of any debt secured on it. No similar arrangement applies to unsecured debts of any type.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations she has received concerning the operation of the CSA. [14225]

Mr. Keith Bradley: In the last six months approximately 500 representations about child support issues have been received from hon. Members and around 900 representations from members of the public, voluntary bodies and other organisations.

We recognise that, despite considerable improvements in the performance of the Child Support Agency, too many representations about the operation of the child support scheme still relate to poor service. We are determined to ensure that absent parents meet their responsibilities and pay the maintenance they owe and we are looking closely at all aspects of the Agency to ensure that it delivers a modern, efficient and effective service to all its clients.

New Deal

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single parents in Warrington, North have benefited from the New Deal programme to date. [15693]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Modernising the Social Security system is a key priority of the Government. Our objective is to reduce poverty and welfare dependency and to promote work incentives. Our welfare to work programme will provide opportunities for lone parents to move into work.

The operational responsibility for the New Deal for Lone Parents is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Helen Jones, dated 13 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many single parents in Warrington North have benefited from the New Deal programme to date.

The information is not available in the format requested. Statistics are collated by each New Deal for Lone Parent service area and not by Parliamentary Constituencies. The Benefits Agency North Cheshire district, which comprises offices at Warrington and Widnes, is one such area.

The New Deal for Lone Parent service offers advice and help with jobsearch, training, childcare and benefits, as part of the Welfare to Work programme, to create a package of back-to-work help for lone parents with school age children. Any lone parent whose youngest child is below school age can benefit from the service.

The New Deal for Lone Parents service has been available in North Cheshire since 21 July 1997 and by 31 October 1997, staff in Warrington had interviewed 233 lone parents, of whom 214 had agreed to participate in the programme and 50 had found work.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) which five areas were used for the pilot schemes in which lone mothers claiming income support were visited by Benefits Agency staff at home, when each scheme commenced; how many claimants have been visited in each of the five areas; what assessment she has made of the success of the pilot schemes; and what proposals she has for further schemes; [13975]

(2) if she will publish the interview questions asked by Benefits Agency staff when interviewing claimants at home; [13974]

(3) what training has been given to Benefits Agency staff to carry out tasks previously carried out by Child Support Agency staff. [13973]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The operation of the Benefits Agency is a matter for its Chief Executive, Mr. Peter Mathison. He will write to my hon. Friends.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Maria Fyfe, dated 13 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions concerning the pilot schemes in which lone mothers claiming Income Support were visited by Benefits Agency (BA) staff at home.

The five sites used for the pilot schemes were Bristol, West Bromwich, Pontefract, Kirkcaldy and Norwich. As a control, and for comparison purposes, the sites were paired with offices of similar size and caseload which were following normal procedures.

Initially two pilot schemes were undertaken; phase 1 from 1 April 1997 to 30 April 1997 and phase 2 from 1 May 1997 and 30 May 1997. Phase 1 involved issuing a Maintenance Application Form (MAF) at the new claims visit and phase 2, issuing and completing the MAF.

250 visits were undertaken for each phase, and the numbers for each site are as follows:

Site	Phase 1	Phase 2
Bristol	60	49
West Bromwich	49	59
Pontefract	42	51
Kirkcaldy	40	28
Norwich	59	63
Total	250	250

The evaluation has shown an improved customer service by the Agencies as all issues are raised at the start of the claim. They have also shown a significant increase in the number of customers co-operating with the Child Support Agency (CSA) at the start of the claim, which will expedite the maintenance process.

The Department's programme for modernising service delivery aims to identify the scope for reducing overlaps and repetition of work between Agencies where they have clients in common. These pilots have demonstrated that lone parents are better served by the Department conducting business in this way.

A third pilot scheme was undertaken form 1 July 1997 to 26 September 1997, involving trained BA visiting staff also questioning customers about their reasons for claiming "Good Cause" where appropriate. Good cause is where the customer seeks to avoid being required to apply for child support maintenance on the grounds that there is a risk of harm or undue distress if the CSA should pursue the absent parent. The same areas were involved in this pilot with the addition of Chilterns, the results of which are currently being evaluated.

Following the successful results of the initial pilot schemes, it has been agreed that MAF issue and completion work should be transferred to the BA from April 1998. To fully consider the impact of this transfer of responsibility to BA, two sites are continuing with phase 2 of the pilot.

A specific list of the questions which the customers are asked when interviewed at home is not available. BA visiting officers are trained to ask the appropriate questions depending on the customers particular circumstances.

The BA staff who have been involved in these pilots have been fully trained in Child Support applications and in interviewing lone parents.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list (a) his Department's policies and initiatives designed to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and (b) the departmental policies and initiatives designed to reduce other greenhouse gases; if he will estimate for each the annual reduction in tonnage of greenhouse gas emissions achieved in the most recent year for which figures are available compared to those for 1990; and what estimate he has made of further reductions, or increases, predicted for 2000 and 2010, assuming continuation of current policies. [15539]

Mr. Fisher: I refer the hon. Member to the United Kingdom's Second Report under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change which was published in February 1997. It reports the UK's progress in implementing its programme for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and gives a projection of what the programme is expected to deliver by 2000. The report projects forward what the current programme is expected to achieve to 2020.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Witnesses

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will review the legislative provision for a maximum daily allowance to witnesses for loss of earnings to ensure that those appearing as witnesses are not out of pocket as a result. [15280]

Mr. Hoon: The present provisions are intended to relieve hardship that may result from witnesses discharging their public duty by attending court to give evidence. I have no plans to change the present legislation. There is inevitably a tension between meeting the full costs of witnesses attending court and the limited public money available to do so. I believe the present provisions strike the right balance in recognising the discharge of a public duty and using limited public funds to best effect.

Amsterdam Treaty

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 27 October 1997, Official Report, column 650, on the treaty of Amsterdam, which parts of that treaty provide for the United Kingdom to opt in or out of civil judicial co-operation measures; and what parliamentary procedure would be required for such decisions. [15032]

Mr. Hoon: The Protocol on the position of the United Kingdom and Ireland has the effect that the adoption of proposed measures under Title IIIa of the EC Treaty, which includes (under Article 73m) civil judicial co-operation, will not apply to the United Kingdom or Ireland unless those countries choose to take part in the adoption and application of such measures. If the Government decided to take part in the adoption of any such measure or to accept an existing measure the usual parliamentary scrutiny procedure would apply.

Sports Clubs

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many instances during the last 10 years a court has refused to renew a lease held by a sports club under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954; and for what reasons. [15149]

Mr. Hoon: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Edward Davey, dated 14 November 1997:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your question about the number of times courts have refused to renew sports clubs' leases.

The information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

E-mail

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to ensure that e-mail between and within Government departments is assessed for historical significance and preserved for record purposes. [15166]

Mr. Hoon: The Question concerns a specific operational matter on which the Chief Executive of the Public Record Office is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the Chief Executive to reply direct.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 14 October 1997:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply for the Public Record Office to your question about the above.

E-mail created or received by Government Departments is covered by the Public Records Act. Departments are therefore under a statutory duty to make arrangements, under my guidance and supervision, for the selection of those records which ought to be preserved permanently and for their safekeeping.

Since 1995 the Public Record Office, supported by a cross-government Advisory Board, has been running an Electronic Records in Office Systems programme to give leadership across government in the management of electronic records, to ensure that such records of long term value are available for future access.

The programme surveys the current programme of electronic records by Departments and delivers advice and guidance on their management, selection and preservation. Two classes of electronic records have so far been transferred to the Public Record Office as pilots, to develop and test the new procedures required. A strategy has been developed to implement the software products supplied by the IT industry, and, in particular, to encourage products that aid the management and archiving of electronic records.

TREASURY

Ombudsmen

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the powers of the (a) banking and (b) building society ombudsmen. [15954]

Mrs. Liddell: Both ombudsmen investigate and adjudicate upon customer complaints within their terms of reference, and make awards where the complaint is upheld. The terms of reference of both schemes exclude purely commercial decisions, unless there is an allegation of maladministration.

HEALTH

Elderly Persons (Local Authority Care)

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the average rate of grant per head received by each local authority for the care of elderly persons. [15029]

Mr. Boateng: Revenue Support Grant is an unhypothecated grant which is distributed to local authorities on the basis of Standard Spending Assessments (SSAs). An SSA is the Government's assessment of the appropriate amount of revenue expenditure which would allow an authority to provide a standard level of service, consistent with the Government's view of the appropriate amount of revenue expenditure for all local authorities. SSAs are not binding on authorities, which are free to decide how much to spend on any service. All personal social services SSAs, including figures on a per capita basis, are listed in the "Local Government Finance Standard Spending Assessment Handbook 1997–98", copies of which are available in the Library.

Head Injuries (Children)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken to improve the treatment of children suffering from severe head injuries. [15482]

Mr. Boateng: Recent improvements in paediatric intensive care will help improve the treatment of children with severe head injuries at the acute stage. In addition we are strongly encouraging better collaboration between the various agencies involved in the provision of rehabilitation, special educational arrangements and social care for all disabled children, including those with head injury.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what liaison his Department has with the Department for Education and Employment and the Department of Social Services to ensure that the wider community is more comprehensively informed about the problems suffered by children with severe head injuries. [15483]

Mr. Boateng: Officials from the Department of Health and the Department for Education and Employment meet regularly to discuss improving awareness of the needs of all children with disabilities encompassing those with severe head injuries. The Department of Health is also in regular contact with social services departments to discuss continuing social care needs and with the Department of Transport to publicise the need to reduce road traffic accidents which are one of the major causes of traumatic brain injury.

North Essex Health Authority

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will assess the effects of the change made in the capitation formula for the allocation of NHS money to North Essex health authority; [16051]

(2) what would be the 1998–99 allocation of NHS money to North Essex health authority using the formula employed for the current year; what would it be if the new formula was fully funded; and what is the actual allocation he has announced for 1998–99. [16052]

Mr. Milburn: The weighted capitation formula is used to set targets which then inform allocations. The formula does not determine allocations. These reflect our decisions on the speed at which health authorities are brought nearer to target through the distribution of growth. If a different formula had been used we might have distributed growth differently. It is therefore not meaningful to recalculate 1998–99 allocations hypothetically.

If the 1997–98 formula had been applied to North Essex health authority's target this would have been 2.86 per cent. greater.

North Essex health authority's 1998–99 general allocation for HCHS is £370,351,000, some 97.73 per cent. of its weighted capitation target of £378,944,000. This represents a 5.01 per cent. cash increase.

Chiropody and Podiatry

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the staffing and personnel figures for all NHS grades and whole-time equivalent staff for chiropody and podiarty for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1994–95. [15365]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. Such information that is available is shown in the tables.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Corporate Community Involvement

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research her Department has conducted into company giving or corporate community involvement, with particular reference to gender balance. [15203]

Mr. Michael: I have been asked to reply.

The Research and Statistics Division of the Home Office is conducting a series of Local Voluntary Activity Surveys (LOVAS) in order to measure levels of voluntary activity across England. These surveys will include some information about corporate community involvement.

In addition, three of the organisations to which the Home Office, through its Voluntary and Community Unit, gives core funding—Business in the Community, the National Council for Voluntary Organisations and the Directory of Social Change—are currently carrying out research into various aspects of company giving and corporate community involvement.

SCOTLAND

Social Services Funding

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list for each social services board his estimate of the additional funding which will be made available this winter; [14591]

(2) if he will list by health authority the dates on which social services departments within each health authority were invited to make applications for additional funding to assist with managing pressures over this winter, indicating the deadlines they were given for completing their funding applications. [14596]

Mr. Galbraith: The Government have provided an additional £25 million to Health Boards in Scotland on a weighted capitation basis to assist with managing winter pressures. It is for Health Boards to work together with other local agencies, including Social Work Departments, to ensure robust plans are in place to cope with increases in demand over the winter. They must determine the most effective use of the additional resources.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will pay the tuition fee for the final year of a four year university course for EU students studying at Scottish universities. [15080]

Mr. Wilson: Eligible EU students undertaking full-time courses of higher education at institutions in Scotland will receive assistance towards their tuition costs on the same basis as Scottish domiciled students.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Government Property Lawyers

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the Quinquennial Review of the Government Property Lawyers. [16664]

The Attorney-General: In accordance with the Government's Policy on periodic reviews of executive agencies the Treasury Solicitor will set in hand this month a thorough review of the Government Property Lawyers. The remit for this review will be as follows:

To carry out a review of the Government Property Lawyers, in accordance with Cabinet Office (OPS) guidance and agreed timetable by

(a) evaluating performance of the Agency since launch;

(b) thoroughly re-examining the case for: abolition, privatisation, contracting out, market testing, rationalisation or merger with other areas of government, and agency or NDPB status, with a view to reaching a future status which will provide the most appropriate and cost effective way of carrying out the functions so as to deliver best value for money and service; and

(c) making recommendations accordingly to the Treasury Solicitor on which he can advise the Attorney-General.

In order to ensure that all options are considered fully, comments from interested parties will be welcome. Comments should be sent by 5 December to the following address:

Mr. C. A. Woolley
Treasury Solicitor's Department
Room 253
Queen Anne's Chambers
28 Broadway
London SW1H 9JS.

The results of the review will be announced in the Spring.

Fair Trade (Coffee and Tea)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to the oral Statement by the Secretary of State for International Development on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 332, if he will instruct officials to serve coffee and tea furnished by suppliers who adhere to fair trade standards in his Department. [15493]

The Attorney-General: I refer to the answer given yesterday to my hon. Friend by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 617. All procurement decisions in my Departments are based on the Government's policy of value for money.

WALES

Health Authority Deficits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the (a) actual deficits and (b) projected deficits of each health authority as a percentage of their budget for the last three years; [14274]

(2) if he will list the (a) actual deficits and (b) projected deficits of each health (i) trust and (ii) authority as a percentage of their budgets for the last three years. [14275]

Mr. Win Griffiths [holding answer 4 November 1997]: The following tables provide the information requested. The Trust figures are based on audited accounts for 1995–96 and 1996–97 and on estimated operational planning figures for 1997–98. The Health Authority figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97 are taken from audited accounts. Those for 1997–98 were derived from monitoring returns and relate to authorities' current financial plans.

Hospitals (Fire Safety)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which hospitals in Wales do not meet the current fire regulations. [15288]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Firecode Policy and Principles 1994 requires Chief Executives of NHS Trusts to endorse an annual certificate of Statutory and Firecode compliance and put in place work programmes which will satisfactorily address all fire certification and Firecode requirements by April 2000. All Trusts have this in place.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) his Department's policies and initiatives designed to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and (b) the departmental policies and initiatives designed to reduce other greenhouse gases; if he will estimate for each the annual reduction in tonnage of greenhouse gas emissions achieved in the most recent year for which figures are available compared to those for 1990; and what estimate he has made of further reductions, or increases, predicted for 2000 and 2010, assuming continuation of current policies. [15549]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I refer the hon. Member to the United Kingdom's Second Report under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change which was published in February 1997. It reports the UK's progress on implementing its programme for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and gives a projection of what the programme is expected to deliver by 2000. The report projects forward what the current programme is expected to achieve to 2020.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the Welsh Office plans to fund all four years of study by students from Wales at Scottish Universities; how many students from Wales are currently in the fourth year of a degree course at a Scottish University; and what assessment he has made of the cost of funding this fourth year. [16092]

Mr. Hain: There were around 100 students from Wales in the fourth year of first degree courses at Scottish institutions in 1996–97 (the latest year for which figures are available). As in England, students from lower-income families will have the whole of their tuition fees paid for them in the fourth as in the previous three years, whilst others may have part of their fees paid, depending on an assessment of their parents', spouses' or own income.

We estimate that the extra of meeting the contributions payable by students from Wales towards fees in the fourth year of first degree courses at Scottish institutions would be some £45,000.

DEFENCE

Equipment Sales

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the equipment formerly used by the United Kingdom armed forces which has been sold overseas since 1995 stating in each case the date sold, the type of equipment sold and the recipient country. [15016]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Disposal Sales Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Malcolm Westgate to Mr. John McDonnell, dated 14 November 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about sales of surplus Armed Forces equipments overseas, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Disposal Sales Agency.

Attached at Annex A is a list of complete major surplus defence equipments sold to overseas Governments since the beginning of 1995, either directly or through UK companies.

Thee have also been sales of substantially incomplete equipments, associated spares and relatively minor material to overseas Governments, either directly or through UK companies, but it would require disproportionate effort to identify them all. However, I would be glad to expand on the list given at Annex A so far as I can without breaching customer confidentiality.

All the sales listed were subject to the usual stringent export control procedures required in the sale of all defence equipments overseas.

Sales of major surplus defence equipments overseas since 1995

Type of equipment sold	Recipient country	Date of sale
Leander Frigate (ex-RN)	India	February 1995

Type 22 Frigates, Batch 1 (ex-RN)	Brazil	August 1996
River Class Minesweepers (ex-RN)	Brazil	August 1996
Light Armoured Recovery Vehicles (ex-Army)	Austria	March 1997

Sales of major surplus defence equipments overseas since 1995

Type of equipment sold	Recipient country	Date of sale
Wessex Helicopters (ex-RAF)	Uruguay	June 1997
105 mm Light Guns (ex-Army)	Botswana	June 1997
Vehicles (ex-Army)	Malta	August 1997
Peacock Class Hong-Kong Patrol Craft (ex-RN)	Philippines	August 1997
105 mm Light Guns (ex-Army)	Eire	September 1997

Training and Research (Animals)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) training and (b) research undertaken by the armed forces which involves the use of animals with in each case the (i) species, (ii) numbers and (iii) procedures concerned; and if he will make a statement. [14234]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 7 November 1997]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 14 November 1997:

I have been asked to respond to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence on animal training and research by the armed forces as the majority of this work falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

DERA does not undertake any training with the armed forces which involves the use of animals. Specifically, medical officers and the other clinical staff are not trained in technical practises using live animals. The Defence Animal Centre at Melton Mowbray does, however, train animals for military duties. In the 1996/97 financial year, a total of 370 dogs were trained for search and patrol duties, and 60 horses were trained for ceremonial duties.

DERA carries out a number of research programmes involving the use of animals and aimed at providing the armed forces with safe and effective protection against specific operational hazards. During 1996, a total of 11221 animals were used. The species were: guinea pigs, hamsters, marmosets, mice, pigs, rabbits, rats, Rhesus monkeys, sheep and goats. To list all of the procedures would involve a disproportionate amount of effort.

One of these programmes involves specifically clinical staff from the armed forces. A small number of medical officers from the Defence Medical Services are seconded to CBD to work with DERA staff on research into the management of battle injury and trauma. During 1997, the species and numbers of live animals used up until the end of October in this research programme were: pigs—46; sheep—14; rabbits—8.

All work at DERA involving the use of animals is carried out strictly in accordance with the requirements of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Chinook Helicopter

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will order a fresh inquiry into the Chinook helicopter crash of 5 June 1994 at the Mull of Kintyre. [15438]

Mr. Spellar: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and my Ministerial colleagues have been fully briefed on the conduct and findings of the RAF Inquiry. We accept, as did the previous Administration, that the Inquiry had properly concluded, on all the evidence, that the pilots had broken safety rules and in that regard had been grossly negligent.

New Deal

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role his Department is playing in the New Deal for the young unemployed. [15638]

Dr. Reid: My Department is keen to play a full part in the Government's New Deal initiative, and a number of exploratory meetings have taken place with officials from the Department for Education and Employment on how best the MOD can contribute. My Department intends to concentrate mainly on the Gateway stage of the Scheme. We are, at the same time, encouraging those who will be involved in providing training for these young people to include self-development courses and briefings on the Armed Forces.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Closed Circuit Television

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department issues to local organisations which intend to submit a bid in the CCTV challenge round planned for next year. [15757]

Mr. Michael: We are currently considering, linked to our review of existing expenditure programmes, how to encourage the appropriate use of closed circuit television (CCTV) in the fight against crime. If we decide to run another round of the CCTV challenge competition in 1998–99, bidding guidance will be made available to interested parties. An announcement on the future of the competition will be made soon.

Police Manpower (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current manpower levels of each Welsh police force; and if he will make a statement. [15818]

Mr. Michael: The latest date for which figures are available is 31 March 1997. The information requested is set out in the table.

Police force	Number of officers at 31 March 1997
Dyfed–Powys	[1]1,004.5
Gwent	1,243
North Wales	1,369
South Wales	[1]2,975.9
Total	[1]6,592.4

The 1994 Police and Magistrates' Courts Act made it a matter for individual chief officers and their police authorities to determine the number of police officers in their area on the basis of the resources available to them.

[1] The fractional figures account for part-timers and job shares.

Prison Workshops (Garth and Wymott)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the future provision and administration of the prison workshops at HM prisons Garth and Wymott. [15743]

Ms Quin: There are no plans to change the arrangements for the provision and administration of the prison workshops at Garth and Wymott. Wymott is part of the Prison Service Workshop Expansion Programme, which aims to maximise employment for prisoners, extend workshop hours and maximise the revenue from the sale of goods and services to local businesses.

New Prisons

Mr. Liwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new prisons are currently being planned; and if he will make a statement. [15745]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service plan to open seven new prisons over the next three years.

Three new prisons will open by the end of February 1998. These are Her Majesty's Prison Parc in Bridgend, Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse in Liverpool and Her Majesty's Prison Lowdham Grange in Nottinghamshire.

A further four prisons are planned to open from mid 1999–2000. These include an 800 place multi-functional male prison at Agecroft near Salford, a 400 place male young offender institution located on the site of the former Her Majesty's Prison Pucklechurch near Bristol and a 600 place male adult training prison at Marchington near Stafford. A fourth prison, at a site to be confirmed, is planned to open in mid-2000.

Prison (Colchester)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which site in the Colchester area was investigated about two years ago for a new prison; and which further site is currently being assessed. [15027]

Ms Quin: The site investigated about two years ago was the former Moler Works in the Hythe area to the south of Colchester. It was immediately rejected as unsuitable.

The site which is currently being assessed is not yet on the open market and it would be inappropriate to identify it at this stage. If the Prison Service considers that it offers potential, and there is a real prospect of its being used for prison purposes, I will write to the hon. Member.

Animals (Scientific Procedures)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 6 November 1997, Official Report, column 284, if he will list the numbers and nature of experiments carried out in 1996 where animals were used to test and develop means of protecting United Kingdom service personnel against terrorist and battlefield weapons. [15952]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not collected centrally by the Home Office. Licensees are not required in their annual statistical returns to specify whether procedures are for the purpose of protecting or treating service personnel. Military medicine is not a separate category of permissible work under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The numbers of animals in question may be recorded in the 1996 annual statistics variously under the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of disease; the advance of biological science; the modification of physiological function; and protection of the environment.

Armley Gaol (Suicides)

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides have taken place at Armley gaol, Leeds, over the last 10 years. [16089]

Ms Quin: The number of deaths at Leeds prison over the last ten years where the Coroner's verdict was suicide is given.

Suicides at Leeds prison: 1988 to 1996

Year	Number
1988	4
1989	2
1990	0
1991	1
1992	1
1993	2
1994	0
1995	1
1996	1

There have been two self-inflicted deaths at Leeds prison as at 13 November 1997. The Coroner's inquests into both have yet to be held.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to review the figures set out in the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme Tariff; and if he will make a statement; [15320]

(2) what plans he has to revise the terms and operation of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [15321]

Mr. Michael: Public expenditure on victims of crime is currently under review as part of the Government's wider comprehensive spending review launched earlier this year. Amongst other things, the review is looking at expenditure on the criminal injuries compensation scheme, as well as on other victims' programmes. The Government will consider whether changes to the compensation scheme might be appropriate in the light of the findings of the spending review.

EU Conventions

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to place before Parliament proposals for approval of the draft conventions on (i) driver disqualification and (ii) mutual assistance on criminal matters; and what steps have been taken to consult other bodies or interests concerned in respect of each convention. [15572]

Ms Quin: It is not possible to give an estimate of when negotiations on the draft Convention on driving disqualifications will be completed, as a number of issues remain to be resolved. Home Office and Department of Transport officials have been collaborating in work on the draft Convention, which will be deposited for scrutiny shortly.

Under the European Union Action Plan to combat organised crime, approved by the Amsterdam Council, the target date for completion of the draft Convention on mutual legal assistance is not later than mid-1998. The Home Office regularly consults other departments and agencies on the draft Convention. The text was deposited for scrutiny on 3 October 1996. A substantially revised and expanded version was sent to the scrutiny committees on 24 July this year and a further updated text was sent to them on 28 October.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 July 1997, Official Report, columns 74–6, concerning the operation of a convention concerning corruption and officials of the European Union and member states; and when and by what means parliamentary approval was given to the convention. [15574]

Ms Quin: The Convention was agreed by the Justice and Home Affairs Council on 26 May 1997. It has not yet been ratified by any member state.

Prior to ratification by the United Kingdom, the Convention will be laid before Parliament for at least 21 sitting days in accordance with the Ponsonby Rule. I regret that the answer I gave to my hon. Friend on 1 July 1997, Official Report, columns 74–6, incorrectly stated that no further Parliamentary proceedings are required in order to ratify the Convention. I apologise for that error.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 July 1997, Official Report, columns 74–6, in respect of the Fraud Convention of the European Community, when he expects to lay an Order under Section 78(3) of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 before each House of Parliament; and what subsequent procedure it will be subject to. [15568]

Ms Quin: We hope to lay an Order by the middle of 1998. This will put the United Kingdom in a position to ratify the Convention. At that point, the Convention will be laid before Parliament in accordance with the normal procedure.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 July 1997, Official Report, columns 74–6, when the Europol Convention acquired legal status in the United Kingdom; on what date the subsequent protocol giving optional powers to the European Court was placed (a) before the Government and (b) approved by Parliament; and where the text of the Protocol is publicly available. [15571]

Mr. Michael: The Europol Convention was signed in July 1995 and ratified by the United Kingdom on 10 December 1996. It will enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiry of a three month period after the last member state has ratified it.

The Protocol to the Convention concerning the Court of Justice of the European Communities was signed in July 1996, laid before Parliament on 11 November 1996 and ratified on 10 December 1996. The text of the Protocol was published as Command Paper Number 3465.

Eurostar

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government are taking to ensure that the Eurostar route to and from the Continent is secure against misuse by illegal immigrants and those wishing to bring illegal drugs into the United Kingdom. [14205]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Foreign nationals travelling on Eurostar services are subject to examination by United Kingdom Immigration Officers. We liaise with French and Belgian authorities to ensure that this control is effective, and are currently examining with Eurostar and French authorities the issue of permanent document checks in Paris. The French authorities are assisting with random checks at the moment. These were introduced at the request of this Government because under the system we inherited there were no checks at all in Paris. Her Majesty's Customs and Excise operate checks for drugs on Eurostar passengers at Ashford and Waterloo terminals. These checks are based on intelligence, information and risk-testing analysis.

Prisons (Private Finance Initiative)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the contracts to (a) manage and (b) build and manage, prisons under the private finance initiative have been let to Group 4 Securitas or consortia including Group 4 Securitas; which of those contracts was awarded after competition in response to the lowest cost bid; and if he will make a statement. [13725]

Ms Quin [holding answer 3 November 1997]: Group 4 Securitas manages Her Majesty's Prison Wolds and Her Majesty's Prison Buckley Hall, and is part of the consortium awarded the contract to design, construct, manage and finance Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse under the private finance initiative. These contracts were decided on the basis of the bid and offered best value for money, having taken account of criteria relating to quality and confidence in deliverability.

Milipol

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if companies attending Milipol at Le Bourget in France on 24 to 27 November will receive any Government support. [14964]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

My Department will not be offering financial support under the Trade Fairs Support Scheme for companies attending Milipol. However, UK firms attending will, like other exporters, be able to obtain advice and information from their local Business Links in England, or from the appropriate Territorial Department in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parades and Marches

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much notice was given by Glasdrummond Band of its parade in Rostrevor on Sunday 2 November; and to whom such notice was given. [15161]

Mr. Ingram: Notice of the parade by Glasdrummond Band was given to the local police on the morning of 2 November 1997.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many parades took place in Northern Ireland from 1 April to 30 September. [15044]

Mr. Ingram: Between 1 April and 30 September of this year there were a total of 2,687 parades in Northern Ireland.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications were received for compensation in respect of damage to persons and property as a result of disturbances associated with marches and demonstrations during July; how many of these were approved; what were the applicable financial figures; how many were rejected; and how many have still to be determined. [15045]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Denis Stanley. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. A. Stanley to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 12 November 1997:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply, on behalf of the Compensation Agency, to your recent Question regarding applications for compensation made in respect of damage to persons and property as a result of disturbances associated with marches and demonstrations during July.

The Agency does not identify separately claims which result from marches and demonstrations and therefore can only supply information in respect of all claims received for incidents during July:

	Criminal injury	Criminal damage
Claims received	1,327	979
Claims settled	3	8
Claims denied	5	10
Claims not yet decided	1,309	961
Compensation paid to date	£5,000	£7,163

In many of the cases not yet decided, full claim details are still awaited. The Agency's loss adjusters are endeavouring to collect these in respect of the criminal damage claims while, of course, interim payments, where appropriate, have been made. In the case of criminal injury claims, medical evidence and evidence in respect of financial loss are being pursued.

Health and Social Services

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions were held in respect of the capitation funding system for health and social services boards; and what criteria governed its formulation. [15042]

Mr. Worthington: The Capitation Formula Review Group, which is an expert group comprising Departmental and Board officers held a range of meetings, and engaged in extensive work, including specific research on Northern Ireland data, before producing its recommendations on the way forward.

The Review Group worked to a specific set of criteria to ensure that the revised formula would:

- be based on sound methodology;
- be a fair and equitable method of allocating resources;
- be based primarily on the requirement to take account of the differing levels of need for health and personal social services between resident Board populations;
- be sensitive to Targeting Health and Social Need (THSN);
- be capable of amendment and further refinement as improvements take place in information sources and the knowledge based on resource allocation;
- be based on factors and/or weights which have a basis in evidence;
- focus on allocations to the total resident populations and should not constrain the development of a formula for allocating resources to GP Fundholders;
- address the inescapable cost differentials for urban-rural areas;
- as far as possible, take account of the impact of cross-border migration and other relevant population movements unless this is addressed by some other mechanism.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has received concerning the health and social services capitation review. [15043]

Mr. Worthington: There has been a range of responses from Boards, Trusts, Members of Parliament and District Councils along very clear lines. Those representing Board areas where it is proposed to reduce the capitation funding share oppose the Review Group's recommendations while those representing Boards areas where it is proposed to increase the capitation funding share support the recommendations.

I can confirm that the majority view is one of support for the recommended way forward.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the financial operations of each of the health and social services trusts in Northern Ireland. [15048]

Mr. Worthington: Various statutory provisions ensure that HSS Trusts in Northern Ireland manage and account for their financial activities in line with sound accounting practice and Government policy. Compliance by each of the Trusts is monitored and assessed by the HSS Executive through a number of mechanisms including financial returns, accounts and audit activity.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what priority was accorded to (a) targeting social need and (b) policy appraisal and fair treatment initiatives in devising the formula for the capitation funding system for health and social services boards. [15051]

Mr. Worthington: The Group developing the capitation formula for the allocation of resources to Health and Social Services Boards assessed their proposals against the requirements of the targeting social need and policy appraisal and fair treatment initiatives and found their recommendations to be consistent therewith.

Homelessness

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to amend legislative provision relating to the homeless in Northern Ireland. [15049]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None at present, but the matter is currently being reviewed.

De Lorean Motors

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on progress in the Government's civil action against Arthur Andersen and Co. in relation to De Lorean Motors. [16280]

Mr. Ingram: I am pleased to report that Government and the Arthur Andersen firms have agreed to settle all claims between them arising from the De Lorean case. After some 12 years of litigation both here and in the United States it was in the interests of both parties that the proceedings be brought to a conclusion.

I believe the terms agreed between the parties represent a fair disposal of the action. Details of the settlement will not be disclosed at this time because of on-going legal action in the United States, action in which Her Majesty's Government is not involved.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

A66

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the dualling of the A66. [15036]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked Mr. Lawrie Haynes, the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Dr. Ashok Kumar, dated 14 November 1997:

As you know the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and Regions has asked Lawrie Haynes, the Chief Executive, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about dualling of the A66. I am replying in Lawrie Haynes absence from the office.

We are aware of the local pressure for dualling the A66 between Scotch Corner and the M6 at Penrith.

The only A66 dualling scheme in the National Trunk Roads Programme is the £15m Temple Sowerby Bypass and Improvement at Winderwath, west of the Pennines. Work has also started to identify a number of smaller schemes to improve junctions and provide shorter lengths of dualling.

As you may be aware, the Government are undertaking a broad based strategic review of the whole Roads Programme. The objective of the review is to determine the role which roads should play in an integrated transport policy and to establish a forward investment programme for the trunk road network in England. A wide ranging public consultation exercise was launched in July and closes on 14 November. The conclusions of this review will be announced next year.

Ministers will consider the case for any further improvements to the A66 as part of this review, and will take account of local views.

Housing (East Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate she has made of the cost of bringing the housing stock in East Lancashire up to standard. [15517]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department has not made specific estimates of the cost of bringing the housing stock in East Lancashire up to standard and the only cost figures available are for the need for capital work to the council housing stock. These figures are provided by local authorities in the annual HIP round and are presented for East Lancashire.

Local authority estimates of the need for capital work to the council housing stock

Local authority	Need for capital works to the council housing stock 1 April 1996 £
Pendle	4,585,000
Ribble Valley	6,689,000
Rossendale	46,641,000
Hyndburn	19,700,000
Burnley	32,611,000
Blackburn	81,965,000

Source:

Housing Investment Programme—HIP3 form.

Authorities do not supply estimates for the private sector or housing association stock within their area. The only related figures available are local authorities' estimates of the numbers of unfit dwellings and, for the housing association stock, dwellings in need of renovation. The reported estimates for 1 April 1996, the latest date for which figures are available, are given in the 1996 "HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library.

Sustainable Transport

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce and publish a central database of best practice in sustainable transport initiatives. [15647]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have no current plans to establish a central database, but my Department will continue to publicise and promote examples of best practice, for example through Ministerial speeches, and Departmental publications and guidance notes.

Some of this material can be found through the Press Notices available on the Department's Internet web site (http://www.coi.gov.uk/coi/depts/GTE/GTE.html).

Vehicle Sharing

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of shared vehicle arrangements in German cities. [15646]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Two current research projects include assessment of the effectiveness of shared vehicle arrangements in German and other European cities. One of these will publish findings early in 1998. The other is informing the Edinburgh City Car Club, due to start operating in April.

School Journeys

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the proportion of children who (a) walked and

(b) cycled to school in (i) 1995, (ii) 1990, (iii) 1985, (iv) 1980, (v) 1975 and (vi) 1970; and if he will make a statement. [15648]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Figures are available for Great Britain from the National Travel Survey only for the years shown in the table.

Percentage of journeys to school by children aged 5–15: 1975–76 to 1994–96

	1975–76	1985–86	1989–91	1994–96
Walking	61	57	56	52
Cycling	4	3	2	11

House Building (Essex)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate how many new homes are to be built before 2016 in (a) the County of Essex, (b) the Borough of Colchester and (c) the District of Tendring. [15773]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 13 November 1997]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on Wednesday 12 November 1997, Official Report, column 554. It will be for the Essex County Council to consider how many additional dwellings will be needed between 2011 and 2016, after taking into account the revised Regional Planning Guidance for the South East (RPG9) now in preparation.

Local Authority Rents

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the gross cost to public funds if all local authority rents were to be cut by (a) 9 per cent., (b) 8 per cent., (c) 7 per cent., (d) 6 per cent., (e) 5 per cent., (f) 4 per cent., (g) 3 per cent., (h) 2 per cent. and (i) 1 per cent.; and what would be the cost net of savings in (i) housing benefits and (ii) public expenditure linked to the RPI. [15861]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 13 November 1997]: A reduction in Guideline Rent in 1998–99 for Housing Revenue Account local authorities in England would have the following estimated effects:

Present value (discounting to 1996–97) of effects from 1998–99 to 2027–28
1996–97 prices discounting to 1996–97

£ million

Guideline rent reduction in 1998–99	Loss of gross rental income	Saving in rent rebates	Saving in public expenditure linked to the RPI	Net public expenditure cost
1 per cent.	582	444	134	4
2 per cent.	1,164	888	268	8
3 per cent.	1,746	1,326	402	18
4 per cent.	2,328	1,767	537	24
5 per cent.	2,910	2,207	671	32
6 per cent.	3,492	2,642	805	45
7 per cent.	4,074	3,080	939	55
8 per cent.	4,656	3,517	1,073	66
9 per cent.	5,238	3,948	1,207	83
10 per cent.	5,820	4,378	1,341	100

Figures in the table have been rounded to the nearest £1 million. The calculations are derived from LAMOD, the Department's model for estimating the public expenditure effects of a change in Guideline Rent policy for local authorities. The results from LAMOD are sensitive to assumptions which are kept under continuous review.

Household Sizes

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been (a) the population, (b) the number of households, (c) the number of single households and (d) the number of single parent households in (i) Essex County, (ii) Colchester Borough and (iii) Tendring District in each year since 1967. [15774]

[1] The lone parent households: The figures for 1972 to 1980 include lone parent households with one or more never-married children, whereas for other years the figures only include those with one or more dependent children i.e., children aged 0–15; or aged 16–18, never-married and in full time education.

Compulsory Purchase

Mr. Jim Cunninghamn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of research conducted by the City University on compulsory purchase procedures; and what plans he has for changes in the operation of such procedures. [15484]

Mr. Raynsford: I hope to publish shortly the report of the research conducted by the City University into the operation of the compulsory purchase procedures. I will want to hear the views of interested organisations and persons on the findings of that research before considering whether any changes may be appropriate to the arrangements for compulsory acquisition and compensation.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

"Excellence in schools"

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate he has made of the proportion of the response to his White Paper "Excellence in schools", which related to each of the chapters upon which comment was sought; and in each case, approximately what proportion of comment expressed (a) support for and (b) opposition to the approach outlined or described; [16055]

(2) how many responses were received to the White Paper "Excellence in schools"; and of these how many (a) were on the tear-off forms in the summary document, (b) were written responses, (c) were in some other form, (d) addressed specifically the questions posed in the White Paper and (e) ranged beyond the questions posed. [16056]

Mr. Byers: We received over 8,000 responses to the White Paper of which some 3,500 were written responses to the full version. The remainder were a combination of tear-off slips and other forms of communication.

Of the 3,500, 138 were from Local Education Authorities and about 600, 2,100 and 700 came from representative organisations, schools and individuals respectively. A breakdown between grant-maintained and LEA-maintained schools is not currently available.

Most responses addressed issues from more than one chapter and many ranged beyond the specific questions posed. There was broad support for the contents of the White Paper.

We continue to consider all the responses in detail.

Head Teachers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many head teacher and deputy head teacher posts are currently vacant in local education authority maintained (a) secondary and (b) primary schools. [16090]

Mr. Byers: The number of head teacher and deputy head teacher vacancies, at January 1997, in local education authority maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England is shown in the following table. Vacancies in grant maintained schools are not included.

Grade of post vacant[1]	Nursery/primary	Secondary
Head teacher	122	29
Deputy head	202	31

[1] Only those posts which were advertised at 16 January 1997 as full-time permanent posts or posts of at least one term's duration are counted as vacancies.

Special Needs

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in encouraging local education associations, other local agencies and business to work together to co-ordinate support for children with special educational needs. [15485]

Ms Estelle Morris: On 22 October we published a Green Paper, "Excellence for All Children: Meeting Special Educational Needs", which encourages local education authorities, other local agencies and business to work together to support the education of children with special educational needs. We are consulting on how to improve and develop such co-ordination.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 300

SESSION 1997–98

3rd November—14th November 1997

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.
